GOD BLESS YOU. How sweetly fall those simple words

Upon the innian heart.
When friends implement by strongest fice.
Age defined by the to part!
An additionable to part!
And strong the property of the second strong the second In breathing out "God bless you."

God bless you!" Oh! few weeks ago I heard the mournful phrase, When one whom I from childhood loved, When one whom I trom canadical low.
Went from my weary gaze;
Now blinding tears full thick and fast,
I mourn my life-lost treasure,
While echoes of the heart bring back
The farewell prayer "God bless you.

The mother sending forth her boy
To scenes untried and new,
Lisps not a studied, stately speech,
Nor murmurs out "adieu."
She trembling says between her sobs,
Whene'er misfortunes press you,
Come to thy mother—boy, come back.
Then sadly sighs, "God bless you."

"God bless you!" more of love expresses. The volumes without number: Reveal we thus or trust in Him, Whose cyclids never slumber. ask in parting no long speech, Drawled out in studied measure; only ask the dear old words, So sweet-so sad-"God bless you."

A GHOST STORY. Some fifteen years ago, a lady of my acquaintance rented from an agent, for the summer months, on very easy terms, a large country house in the mountains of Virginia. Thither she repaired with her family and a party of friends; and, after taking possession, learned the secret of the "very moderate terms," of the agent. Two years previous, an old man had been found dead in the attic. under circumstances which justified suspicion of foul play. The house was of course no one would take it, until Mrs. ---, at-night, in consequence of noise in the attic above his room. On the following day there was the complaint from another of the house

Mrs. - suggested that one of the servants had probably been searching for something among the lumber contained in the attic; but it should not occur again-she would lock the door and take away the key, which

· A night passed quietly; and then again the noise was heard, this time by Mrs. --herself-strange, muffled sounds, followed by the dull fall of some heavy but not very hard body. What could it be Mrs. - thought. And that day she had the attic door nailed up, as additional security. She began to feel nervous. On this day the gentlemen of the party, four in number, went on a hunting excursion, leaving the ladies alone. In the evening a storm arose, which prevented their return at the usual hour. At nine o'clock the household retired: but scarcely had Mrs. -- closed her eyes in sleep, when she was aroused by two of the family in a tate of creat excit "There are such strange noises. Did she not hear them?" Yes she heard them distinetly now-odd, unearthly sounds, such as none of the party could account for. Others of the family also heard, and soon the whole household was gathered in the room of Mrs. They clung together, pale and trembling. The mysterious sound continued—a muffled voice, a sharp, shrill, suffocating cry or shrick; and then again the fall of a heavy body, and two or three sharp knocks on the floor with a stick, followed by a sound as of some body dragged with difficulty over the floor. Then they distinctly heard the quick, sharp knocking repeated again and again, at the door at the head of the attic stairs, which we have said Mrs -- had caused to be nailed up. The whole party were now in a state of speechless horror. But how much more was this increased when they heard those strange gurgling, suffocating cries on the attic stairs, opposite the door of the room in which they were, and then a step coming down, as of some one walking with a cane, and struggling with another who endcavored to detain him. Suddenly there was a rush, a fall, and then a sharp knock at the door of Mrs. --- 's room, and one wild shrick arose from the terrified women, as they huddled in the remotest corner, clinging to each other as with a death grasp. At this moment the tramp of horses was heard without. Thank God! the gentlemen had returned; and throwing up the window they all screamed for help. The next moment the gentlemen were in fly the perusal: My DEAR DAUGHTER:-You have just en tered into that state which is replete with happiness and misery. The issue depends upon the prudent, amiable, uniform conduct, which wisdom and virtue so strongly recommend, on the one hand, or on that importance which a want of reflection or passion may prompt on the other may prompt on the other.

You are allied to a man of honor, of tal-is always most praiseworthy, and the most anger. A man of sense, of prudence, of warm feelings cannot, and will not, bear an opposition of any kind, which is attended by an angry look or expression. The current of his affection is suddenly stopped; his attackment is weakened; he begins to feel a Fredenic's present Premier the Earl of mortification the most pungent; he is belit-tled even in his own eyes, and be assured the wife who once excites those sentiments in the breast of the husband, will never regain the high ground which she might and ought to have retained. When he marries ter, if he is a good man, he expects to find in

Be assured the country, and offered it for sale or to rent, that one difference outweighs them all a thousand or ten thousand times. A difference and silly complaints, but afters them in vain.
The love of a husband can be retained only by the high opinion which he cutertains of his wife's goodness of heart, of her amisble disposition, of the sweetness of her temper, of her prudence, of her devotion to him. Let nothing, upon any occasion, ever lessen that opinion. On the contrary, it should augment every day; he should have much more reason to admire her for those excellent qualities which will east a lastre over a virtuos woman when her personal attractions are no more.

Has your husband staid out longer than you expected? When he returns, receive him as the partner of your heart. Has he disappointed you in something you expected, whether of ornament, or of turniture, or of any convenience? Never evince discontent; more in his product, with the following the product of the product any convenience? Never evince discontent; receive his apology with cheerfulness. Does he, when you are house-keeper, invite company without informing you of it, or bring home with him a friend? Whatever may be your repast, however scanty it may be, or how impracticable it may be to add to it, receive them with a pleasing countenance, adorn your table with cheerfulness, give to your husband and to your company a hearty welcome: it will more than compensate for welcome; it will more than compensate for every other deficiency; it will evince love for your husband, good sense in yourself, and that politeness of manners which acts as the GIVING JOY TO A CHILD.—Blessed be the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may again bloom forth. Does not almost everybody remember one kind-hearted man who showed a kindness in the dulcet days of his childhood? He could not but listen, and regard to a picture which he wished to place it was a curtain lecture which she was giving before the public, but it had been criticised her lord. He had done something during the day which she thought ought to have been done differently, and she was giving-him her opinions in somewhat animated and quite decided tones. The great man listened in silence till she had done, and then, with-
