OUR CHILD'S MARRIAGE.

The bridal flowers are dying fast,

And we are sad and lone. We think of her so far away,

We miss our darling's voice

The gentle step, the silvery laugh,

That made our hearts rejoice.

I seek her room-last time I went

There lie the books she left behind, In each her maiden name;

Lee that I should refrain from doing so. He has a mortal dread of appearing in the papers, and, considering how he has been misrepresented, this is not wonderful. How Fashions in Hair Affect the Appearance.—The ladies, particularly the younger portion, will follow fashion in dressing their heads regardless of consequences. No matter how hideous a peculiar manner of arranging the hair may make them appear, the hair is worn in that style so long as it is the fashion. Of late the hump or waterfall has been worn high on the back of the head, and it has been somewhat circumscribed while it was made higher in its projection from the head. The effect of this is to give the lady an immense length of head, measured by a line running from the point of the chin to the top of the hump. If the chin be long the more striking is the effect produced, and the larger headed the girl can make herself the more she is up to the fashion. Add to this fashion the little flat, cyster shell—or whatever it may be called—worn as an apology for a bonnet, pitched upon the forehead, with straggling curls as a forepiece, and you see a young lady who looks as though the fields—ladd been ill the fie forehead, with straggling curis as a torepiece, and you see a young lady who looks as though she had lost all her friends—had been ill with dyspepsia for a year, or had been fitting herself for a foot race. All this applies only to those ladies whose faces are not particularly round or fat. It is gratifying to notice that the waterfalls are working down on the backs of the ladies heads, and braids have been suspended therefrom to relieve them of been suspended therefrom to relieve them of their deformity somewhat.

GROWTH OF PHILADELFHIA.—The population of Philadelphia is now greater than that of any European city, except London, Paris, and probably Constantinople. The other prominent and. populous European cities rank as follows: Berlin, in 1861, 547,571; St. Petersburg, in 1858, 220,131; Vienna, in 1857, 476,222; Liverpool, in 1866, 484,337; Naples, in 1862, 447,005; Glasgow, in 1866, 452,205. Philadelphia contained, in 1866, 665,529, and this has since, no doubt, been increased to upwards of 700,000, and may now reach 750,000. The population of London, according to the census taken last year, was 3,037,091, and of Paris, seconding to the French census of 1860, 1,825,274. The Press says the growth of Philadelphia has been so steady and uniform its prosperity rests on such a solid basis, and there are so few obstacles to its indefinite extension, that it is destined at no distant period to become one of the most populous cities in the world, to rival Paris or London, as it has already outstripped Vienna, Berlin, Naples and St. Petersburg. Praying for a Husband.

A correspondent of the Rochelle (Illinois) Register locates the following near that place. Though the story is considerably older than the correspondent, it is worth reading: "A young lady heard that if she would go out and pray three successive nights the Lord would tell her who she would marry. Now it happened that her father had a young man in his employ who had considerable wit and good humor about him. One evening he was out on an apple tree after fruit, when he heard some one praying something like this: "O. Lord who will I marry?" The idea popped into young Doyle's (that being the young man's name) Doyle's (that being the young man's name) mind that he would have a little sport at her Doyle's (that being the young man's name) mind that he would have a little sport at her expense. So he speke in a changed volce, and said "Doyle," "No, Lord, not Doyle," cried the astonished young lady. "Yes, Doyle, or no one," again sounded from the tree top in a sober, hollow volce. She arose and entered the house, resolved to try again the next evening. Of course Doyle did not wish to spoil the fun, and so the next evening found him seated in the tree top. He did not have long to wait before the young husband-seeker came and commenced praying in the same way that she did the preceding evening, and received the same answer. The next evening also found her under the tree pleading to know her future husband's name, and again she heard the answer. "Doyle or no one." She arose, feeling satisfied that she must marry Doyle. The next morning she met him and asked him why he did not dress up and put on better clothes. He said he was not able, "Well," said she, "father is rich and he will let you have money." He took that for a pretty good hint and bought a new suit of clothes. In a short time he offered his heart and hand, and was accepted. After their marriage he told her how her prayers were answered. If any of the fair readers of this story should think of praying for a husband do not go under a tree, or if you do be sure and examine it closely and see if there is any

A RICH INCIDENT.—A convention of North Carolina "loyalists" and colored people, recently met in Raleigh. During the proceedings a rich incident occurred: It seems that the clerk of the convention had inserted the term "colored" on his roll, opposite the names of the colored members. On the roll being called at the session referred to, Mr. Col. Rev. James Sinclair, better known as the "fighting parson," arose and moved that the term "colored" be expunged, as not respectful to the colored delegation. James H. Harris, an intelligent and respected colored man, arose and said he did not see any good reason for the proposition. The record was literally true. God had made them colored men, and he was not ashamed of anything that God had done. He was not ashamed of his color, and he hoped the gentleman from Robeson was not ashamed of his! The "fighting parson" caved in. fighting parson" caved in.

A FRIENDLY HORSE.—A few days since, as we were leaving our residence on our usual morning visit to the office, a sorrel horse belonging to us, galloped up and caught our arm, and made an attempt to pull us in the direction he wished to go. He then left and went off on a quiet gate toward a pasture on a farm about a quarter of a mile distant from our residence. In a few minutes he approached us again, making an unusual noise, and seemed by his actions to desire us to follow him. This we did, and when we reached the pasture we observed the mate of the horse entangled in a bridge which had broken through with him. After we had

INTERVIEW WITH GEN. LEE. do not go under a tree, or if you do be sure and examine it closely and see if there is any one to answer it." Having made a somewhat close study of the campaigns of General Lee, and having, besides, followed with interest his operations on the actual field of battle. I had long been on the actual field of battle, I had long been desirous of learning by personal sight and converse what manner of man he is. The proffer of an introduction by a personal friend enabled me to gratify this wish; and, after breakfast, we repaired to the residence of the chieftain of the Army of Northern Virginia. It stands on Collegs Hill, and is a modest brick dwelling with white wooden pillars in front, placed amid a pretty garden shaded with some fine trees and a large solltary weeping willow. The house is surroundtary weeping willow. The house is surrounded by a high fern hedge that lends it somewhat the air of aristocratic seclusion. Alwhat the air of aristocratic section. Arthough it was no later than nine in the morning, Gen. Lee had already gone to his office in the college, which is but a stone's throw removed. Here was a table niled up with papers, college catalogues and text-books; but no reminiscence of war was visible, no sword or spur or insignic. Whatever met.

leathern gauntlets, he rode out on the game what he would be in greatness. what he would be in greatness. He has added great prosperity to the town, and Washington College, under his Presidency, has been lifted from the grade of a brokendown academy to the position of a respectable and highly-flourishing institution of learning.

That Gen. Lee will figure in history, when it comes to be written with full light and without passion or prejudice, as a very able commander, a skillful methodical soldier, who made several admirable defensive campaigns fought two or three brilliant aggreswell known that he was an ardent lover of the Union, and that he was, as I have learned since I came here, always an emancipationist. He was, therefore, not the type of nor the leader of that fierce and Titan spirit that sought in the ruin of a nation to erect an empire on the foundation of Slavery. Such a spirit needed embodiment in a brain and hand swift and aggressive and flamboyant as itself. Nor, on the other hand, was he great itself. Nor, on the other hand, was he great enough to stand forth as a patriot; but he permitted himself to be drawn into the vortex of passion that seethed and bubbled in his section, to be allured by poor blind fallacies instead of following the inspirations of greatness. I think he is far from happy. And yet his fame as a soldier, though not first-class, is very sound and complete, so that now, away from the field of war, and buried here in quiet academic life, among these sectuded hills, it seems as though he had passed away from earth. He is all that is left of away from earth. He is all that is left of Virginia, magna mater cirum, out of the wreck of a revolution. Is it, then, wonderful that Virginians almost adore him?—

A FARMER was elected to a corporalship in a military company. His wife, after discoursing with him for some time on the advantage which he would derive from his exaltation, inquired, in an ambiguous tone, "Husband, will it be proper to let our children play with the neighbor's now?" "Certainly any dear, we must feel proud if dren play with the neighbor's now?" "Certainly, my dear; we must not feel proud if we are exalted." One of the little urchins asked, "Are we not all corporals?" "Tut," said the mother, "hold your tongue; there is no one corporal but your father and myparties.
