Gen. Sheridan in Erie.

A telegram having been received here about noon on Tuesday that Gen. P. H. LEGANT SLEEPING CARS Sheridan would pass through on the 4 o'clock train, a committee was hastily selected to meet him at Westfield, and tender the hospitalities of our citizens. The committee, consisting of Mayor Noble, Ex-Mayor King, Generals Brown and Walker, Capt. Walker, B. F. H. Lynn, John H. Walker, T. B. Vincent, C. B. Curtis, Rev. Dr. Lyon, Benj.

Whitman, S. S. Spencer, J. M. Kuhn and L. L. Lamb, left at 2 o'clock, and, after waiting some time at Westfield, met the train carrying the General, and returned with him to this city. On their arrival at the depot, an nmense crowd was found to have collected. and the General was welcomed with wild cheering and the firing of cannon. He was led from the car towards the depot building. with the intention of placing him in a position where all could see him and pay their respects, but so eager was the desire of the crowd to grasp him by the hand, that it was found impossible to carry out the programme fixed upon. After several ineffectual at tempts to secure him a conspicuous position, the effort was abandoned, and the General returned to his car, favorably impressed no doubt with the enthusiasm of our people, but hardly as well with their manners. His stay here was only fifteen minutes, and the abrupt character of his reception could not have rendered it a very pleasant one to him. The General was on his way to Columbus Ohio, for the purpose of attending a wedding of a member of his staff. He was laboring under a severe cold, caused, he said, by the excitement and exposure to which he had been subjected, and conversed with apparent difficulty. The General is a short, stoutly built man, 35 or 38 years of age, and looks more prepossessing than the portraits of him we find the following spicy paragraphs: lead one to expect. His whole appearance is that of a thorough soldier; he is a pleas ant talker and seemed disposed to make him self as agreeable as possible ;# his manners though not polished, are genial and calculated to make a good impression. On the whole, we were better pleased with him than
