In this war upon women, it is painful to see editors who claim to be governed by the decencies of life, and to be gentlemen in name if not by nature, join in the cry of black-guards and shanderers to traduce the wife of the man whom they professed to believe without a peer within the length and breadth of the land. Such things are disgraceful.

has no reuson to anticipate assistance. has no reason to anticipate assistance. So long as Mr. Lincoln was alive, and could dis-pense patronage in the shape of contracts and offices, he was a demi-god. After his death, so long as his body could be used to fire the Northern heart against the South, and to assist in preparing the public mind to back up schemes of disfranchisement and severity, so long was it kept above ground and forced into an unseemly, indecent and prolonged exhibition all over the North. The moment his remains were entombed, and were of no further use in making voters or creating a public sentiment tavoring the Radical designs against the South, they were forgotten. An attempt to erect a monument fitting to his party life and services proved abortive. Radicalism had neither time nor money to expend in commencent in the Sorvices of deed we have never approached a question with halt the sorrow that this one awakeas. To vindicate shield, and protect "Heaver's best gift to man" is a grateful duty, while to even reprove, and much more to assail a woman, is painful, and if without a perfect justification, unmanly.

If the American Congress or the American and much we falled to meet the pecuniary exhibits we would be glad to have it do; but in order that the people of the nation should be supported and courted! How suppliant was Frestdent Ars. Intend was of use. She could be implored for office. She could be made available in securing patronage. How she was feted and courted! How suppliant Radicals thronged her levees, flattering her wit, her graces, her intelligence, and craving her and could be seen to be seen to be supplied to the seen to be seen her powerful influence to carry out their pur poses! How they overwhelmed her with shawls, and silks, and laces, and diamonds, tortably as she lived before going to Washington.

able four story marble front house, bought two years ago at a cost of $16,000, which could be sold to-day for $25,000. This dwelling is said to have been completely furnish ed in the most elegant style, which furniture was sold at auction, realizing almost their full retail value when Mrs. Lincoln discontinued housekeeping last summer. At the same time she parted with a valuable carriage and span of horses, besides the usual appropriate ac-cessories of a first-class equipage, so that at the beginning of the summer, or rathrelate in the spring, Mrs. Lincoln must have had at least $10,000 in ready money. She spent the summer very quietly and economically at Racine, situated a few miles from Lake Michigan. It was pretty generally published that Mrs. Lincoln had accumulated $85,000, which were invested in government bonds on deposit in Washington. This, with the addition of Mrs. Lincoln's personal estate and the $25,000 appropriated by Congress, makes the value of the personal estate inherited by Mrs. Lincoln to be about $110. 000, to say nothing of the real estate describ-ed in the inventory of the Lincoln estate recently published.

tion of that lady, and about five hundred let tes have been addressed to prominent poli-ticians and colored clergymen, calling upon them for donations. A book has also been opened in Mr. Brady's rooms, on Broadway, where her wardrobe is on exhibition, for the same purpose. The stream of visitors still continues, although but few purchases are made. Among those derly to be seen in the establishment is Mrs. Elizabeth Keckley, a Washington modiste, who was also the milliner of Mrs. Lincoln, when that distressed and illusted person was the Lady of the public. We therefore give it below.

[From the Boston Advertiser, October 7.]

When the news of Lee's surrender reached
Washington, in that happy time of national rejoicing, which the assassin's hand cut off so sharply a day or two later, a jubilant crowd flocked around the White House to call on the President, whose words of sadness, of hope, of encouragement and high resolve had given voice to the people's hearts on many less cheerful occasions of the war. The speech which Mr. Lincoln then made—short, appropriate full of feeling and of wishort, appropriate full of feeling and of wishort, appropriate full of feeling and of wishort, appropriate for less price. She also remarked that people here had not that reverence for loyalty and former greatness as in Europe, nor do they pay particular respect to relics, and a new dress has in their eyes much more value than the old raiment of the widow of a martyred President. She said the politicians used to besiege Mrs. Lincoln, and that presents would be sent to her from people whom she had never seen. She was courted for her

This demand, though wholly illegal, coming from the President's wife, embarrased the Secretary, who called spon the Secretary of State for advice, where to learned that Mr. Seward had also dined the Prince having the contact of grants. aristocracy. After the death of her husband her conduct was disgraceful. She lingered in the White House, and when she had to leave it sought to appropriate as her person-al property articles that belonged to the house. Having been charitably permitted to sink into obscurity she demands notoriety at the expense of public shame, and we have no doubt she enjoys the large advertising she is receiving from the press of the country. She has plenty of money to live comfortable learned that Mr. Seward had also dined the Prince, having the same number of guests, and giving them a duplicate of the dinner at the White House. In fact, Mr. Seward ordered both dinners from the same restaurant, and by his own bill knew the cost of each. For what Mr. Seward paid $300, Mrs. Lincoln demanded $900. But whether three or nine hundred, the claim was alike illegal, and could not be paid. For this, however, Mrs. Lincoln quarrelled with Secretaries Smith and Seward. This amount, however, was subsequently covered up in a gardener's account, but occasioned scandal, which respect for Mr. Lincoln measurably suppressed. She has pleaty of money to her comfortable with, but she wants show, and regards it her right to revel in barbarle pomp. Hence her cries about the ingratitude of the people and the need of money. If she had had the good sense to return to her old house in Springfield, and to live modestly there, she, with all her fants, would have been respected, and prochase in time she might have been recerted. field, and to live modestly there, she, with all posure of somebody or something if she does not get her price. The obscurity of the old home in Springfield would be mortifying to think of such a thing linewer. Her complaint of straightened circumstances is unwarranted. Though Mr. Lincoln left an estate which enabled his family to live quite as comforta-bly as they had ever lived, Congress and the people would have promptly and cheerfully provided munificently for them if Mrs. Lincoln herself with every advantage that high position gave her, had made friends or inspired respect. And this last exhibition proves how instinctively right the popular estimate of her character was.

The fact for which Mrs. Lincoln seeks large publicity, panelly that the precipied Before the wife of Lincoln ever dreamed of going to the White House, she was a terror to the village of Springfield, Illinois, where she lived, and the eccentricities of Ann Toldi—so she was always called—were common talk. The patient Mr. Lincoln was a second Socrates within the sacred precincts of his own dwelling. The exhibition she has recently made of herself surprises no one, and will have no furfluence either upon the large publicity, namely, that she received presents valued at $24,000, is a pregnant and angestive one—suggestive, at least, of offices and contracts, unless the more charitable construction is reached through the assumption that they were expressions of regard and friendship. But it is not known that the wife of any President, however estimable, was so loaded with shawls, laces, diamonds, those is the same of the s and will have no influence either upon the memory of her husband or upon the characmemory of her hussend or upon the character of the Republican leaders she insanely hopes to injure, since she cannot, black-mail them. This mortifying revelation will go abroad, and as is metaral, the press of Europe will make the most of it, in deprecating the ingratitude of our government and the want of liberality in the American people. The bitter ferocity of the Republican press on the widow of President Lincoln is without a parallel in the annals of newspaper warfare. We have little sympathy with Mrs. Lincoln, and even less for the Republican party. This party helped make this woman what she is, and we are not certain but what they ought to aid her in her extremity. We don't want them to call an extra session of Congress, or-to pass a bill for the purpose of reconstruct ing her. We simply desire that they should part with a little of the wholesale plunder her husband's policy enabled them to acquire, and buy her peace. The world has heard enough of this, and it is time, for their own reputation, if not for that of the nation, that the memory of this woman should die out, and "that the places that have known her should know her no more forever."

The speech which Mr. Lincoln then made—short, appropriate, full of feeling and of wisdom—was one of his best efforts, and the circumstance of its being his last public words and so soon followed by his murder, caused it to be especially prized and remembered by the public afterwards.
