Woodruff, Erie, befo	assiled the General's wife and the fight be- came general, Amy in the meantime expos- tulating and counselling peace. Finally we all succeeded in resuming our perpendicular positions but old Crow, who was just then the special object of a charge from the General. Amy was playing Pocahontas, by leaning over the old carcass, and succeeded in caus- ing the General to retreat. She then placed her arms around him and attempted to raise him. I blew up. Mak- ing a charge upon old manhood—I ruined a calf skin. Mrs. Crow patted ine on the back with a chair, whilst the young Crows set up a regu- lar down South jubilee. But I cleaned them out. I did, indeed. The last words I heard from old Crow were. "You're no gemman." Scraggs enjoyed it Amy was exceedingly sorry, and could not comprehend what had caused the row. The General and his wife were off in a flurry. And I—I was the maddest and mutes: Radical in the State. I pursued after the General to apologizz and explain, and run into old Crow. Hi gave me an exhibition of his "manhood," and seeing I was flanked, I wheeled to retreat In my haste I encountered the wench and over we went. I partially recovered and started on al fours, when old Crow came to my assistance and py an attack upon the rear enabled me to make the fastest time on record. As I came down the pavement I discov ered a waving handkerchief. It was Amy's Scraggs had assumed a belligerent position and as I passed him, set Crow to trotting in the opposite direction. He made good time but nothing in comparison to what I had done. Since which time I have been dubbe; "Dexiter" by Amy and her father, and at th least intimation that I intend vote the Radic i the opposite direction.
