the company have no intention to obey the law unless compelled by the strong arm of the State. It is contended that in a strict legal sense, the company, by refusing to obey one portion of the charter, have forfeited the whole, but the State officers do not intend forcing the case to this unpleasant conclusion unless the company, by its perverseness, shall oblige them to resort to the full extent of the law. The Senate has authorized the Attorney General to proceed by such means as may be necessary to secure obedience to the violated charter, and instructed him, if he fails to bring the matter to a satisfactory point through the Courts, to report to that body what additional legislation is required to compel the enforcement of the company's obligations to the State.
