

HAPPY DAYS ON THE YOUGHIOGENY.

On Youghio's bank I roam,
And see the rushing torrents foam,
In frantic rage the spray,
As bright as sunlight in my eye.

I love to hear the torrent beat
Against the rocks beneath my feet;
The banks are clad in moss as green
As mortal eye hath ever seen.

With willing hand I cast the fly
Just where the speckled beauties lie;
The waters break—a flash of gold
Imports to me a joy untold.

The trout is hooked with barb of steel,
And bending rod and spinning reel
Each plucky fisher's hand is true,
And each a queen would fawn her eyes.

The Blue Handkerchief.
A Translation from the French.
About the end of October, last year, I was returning on foot from Orleans to the Chateau de Cardy.

For him this was an unmanageable, as though all had been provided for in the capitulation—the crime, the punishment, the justice and even the humanity.
