The successful application of onions to a snake bite, recently noticed in the Gazette, has brought out the fact that the old hunter's cure (burying the part wounded in clay, mixed to the consistency of mortar,) was successfully practiced in Derry township by Mr. Frain, who in walking barefoot about a field near the house felt a sting on the foot, and from the pain and swelling soon ascertained that he had been bitten by a snake. He at once resorted to the bank of Jack's creek, buried the foot in the clay, and felt immediate relief; and although the poison had begun to spread through his leg, he recovered after a few days' confinement.

We published this obituary some years ago at the suggestion of Judge Morrison, and it ought to be borne in mind by all classes—in fact were persons going where venomous snakes are likely to be, to take along a few onions to be used where clay is not to be had, almost any one can guard against what might otherwise prove an appalling calamity.—Lewistown Gazette.
