The people of Decatur, Alabama, jubilant over the advent of the new year on the morning of January 1, 1876, and riddled the Stars and Stripes with bullets, and after that tore the flag into shreds.

A correspondent in McClure's Times has been criticizing the preachers for permitting an unordained preacher like Moody, to lead them all. He complains that he has taken all the honors, and that such a recognition as has been accorded to a layman, such as Moody, has a tendency to lessen the dignity of the ministry.

Benjamin Thomas, who had been in the Western States, was returning to his father's residence in Walker township, on the 22nd ult. About one mile on this side of his home he stopped to see relatives. In leaving them he fell off a low fence at the right arm between the elbow and shoulder.

Thanking you all for your patronage in the past, I earnestly solicit a continuance of your confidence and patronage in the future.

Yours respectfully, J. B. M. TODD. Patterson, Feb. 2, 1876.

ANNOUNCEMENT.—J. & H. A. Stambaugh respectfully announce to the public that in order to settle up the estate of J. Stambaugh, deceased, they have determined to close out their very large assortment of general merchandise.

While selling out they will at all times keep a full assortment of Calicoes, Muslins, Cottonades, Gingham, Notions, &c., together with a full line of Syrups, Sugars, Coffee, Soaps and Spices.

Our terms from this date will be positively Cash, except to farmers having produce accounts with us. The losses incident to the pernicious credit system make the cash system a necessity with us.

Queenware, Glassware, and many other lines of goods will be sold with regard to cost, for cash.

We will also state that on the first of April we will move the balance of our stock yet remaining into the very handsome store room in the Odd Fellows' Hall, on Bridge street.

To any one wishing to engage in the mercantile business, we will sell the entire stock and fixtures at a liberal discount. There is not a handsomer store room or more desirable location in central Pennsylvania than the one now occupied by us.

J. & H. A. STAMBAUGH. Feb. 2.

LAST Thursday morning about 1 o'clock the front door of ex-Sheriff McCartney, of Carlisle, was broken open and an "infernal machine" thrown into the hall of the house.

In a few moments it exploded with a power which tore out the curbstones and threw them through a strong fence on the opposite side of the street, forced cellar doors from their fastenings, demolished all the shutters, window sash, and glass for a half square north and south of the spot where the destructive agent was ignited.

At the residence of Dr. Grove, on Poughnet street, fully a square distant the force of the explosion broke in the second story window, threw the doctor's own mother down, and extinguished the light in the room.

The explosion was heard several miles from town by farmers who happened to be awake. Thousands of people visited the scene during the day, and the universal opinion was that the perpetrators of the crime should be lynched.

Efforts are being made to ferret out the perpetrators of the deed, which it is hoped will be successful.

A Twenty-five Thousand Dollar COAL OIL JOHNNY IN BRACKS COUNTY.

After a few prefatory remarks, the Reading Eagle tells of his exploits in this way:

He was what is termed a very seldom young man, not met with every day. He arrived in Reading Monday evening from Allentown, having passed through there on his way here from Bucks county.

He was a stranger and why he selected this city to run through with a portion of his inheritance is not known. He formed the acquaintance of several parties, who were strangers here, and he invited them to dinner at a prominent hotel. They went and were dined and wine in a most sumptuous manner.

Wednesday the three went to Philadelphia and were fitted out in magnificent style at one of the large ready-made clothing houses. They came back entirely new from top to bottom, including his boots and hats silk pocket handkerchiefs, seal rings and silk underclothing. They purchased the finest to be had, even to suspenders and stockings. The stranger paid all the bill.

Wednesday night they returned to Reading again and having invited three notorious females, they met at a downtown resort and indulged in a supper that cost $95, including champagne, roast duck, oysters, sweetbreads, salads and two closed carriages to take them home when the supper was over, because they could not walk.

Thursday the stranger resolved to do it alone and have no more to do with his female friends. He gave each of them a fifty dollar bill for a present provided they would say nothing. They promised, and having had enough sport with their new found friend, they took their simple satchels and went away to attend to business as usual.—They represent large New England firms and were selling goods by sample. At Harrisburg one of the parties addressed a note to an Eagle reporter telling him to go to several places in Reading where the correct information concerning the young spendthrift could be obtained.

The Bucks county man gave his name as Marcus Geber, but it is supposed that this was an assumed one. When partly under the influence of liquor he forgot himself and told a portion of his history. By all accounts his parents are dead and they left him a large amount of money. The greater portion of his funds are in the hands of a guardian, but several weeks ago he came into the possession of $3,500 by the death of a maiden aunt. With this sum he determined to have a good time, as his guardian never gave him much money at a time, and seldom, if ever he was able to get away from his country home. By all appearances he had an Academic education, but had never seen much of city life. He took a fancy to a young woman because she pointed out his faults in dress, told him what colors best became him, how to wear his hair, to throw off paper collars and cuffs and to wear Windsor scarfs instead of ready-made bows, to fasten with a gum loop, and stick under the collar. She one day said she would like to make a gentleman of him, and he gave two hundred dollar bills and told her to go ahead with the job. Her purchases were silk underwear, lines wear, neck wear, gloves and gentlemen's fancy articles generally, including fine and fancy cut shirts with delicate stripes and dots. He was much pleased with the change, and he being made to ferret out the perpetrators of the deed, which it is hoped will be successful.

Thousands of people visited the scene during the day, and the universal opinion was that the perpetrators of the crime should be lynched. Efforts are being made to ferret out the perpetrators of the deed, which it is hoped will be successful.
