From yonder saw-null be did swing, With aching pain his head was filled; That aching pain its music sang : "And why should I have aching pains When a man in Salem cures the same ?' Down, down to Salem he did rule, With lightning speed did ride, And when he reached the Salem store He met a blacksmith at the door : If he could move his aching tooth. The smith he quickly gave consent To take both hands and try his strength. Alas! poor man, he did sit down To have his tooth took out in town. The dentist without a thought Commenced his work like at the shop. Without a soul to hold his head Now when this work had fair com Sampson then with all his strength This man was pulled from off the bench. "Stop! stop!" he mambling cried; "Your blacksmith shop is on youder side, Tis a mistake to think you have a heat Since you have pulled me from my seat." Now, should you think I tell a lie Or doubt what I say, Just come to Salem when you may,

That smith will wouch for what I say. Yours truly,
