Some days ago, a load of wood was hauled three or four miles and unloaded at the house of Mr. John McLaughlin, in Turbett township. It had not lain long before som one of the family discovered that a brood of seven wrons lay in a nest in a hollow stick that had been unloaded. The old birds doubtless were in a flutter, miles away, over the loss of the brood. A strong feel ing of sympathy sprang up for the young birds. A couple of wrens at that time were caring for a nest full of young wrens, on the porch of Mr. McLaughlin. The idea was suggested that perhaps the porch pair of old wrens would adopt the brood that had been brought from the woods. Acting on the suggestion, the wood wrens were put into a basket and hung near the mest on the porch.
