The Savings-Banks

It is not to be denied that the funds held by our savings-banks should be European fabrics of various kinds, full watched over and guarded with reli-trowsers, slippers, an over-dress more gious care; but, when the zeal that congious care; but, when the zeal that con-cerns itself with this most important interest impeaches the whole system of savings because of cortain derelictions in the administration of the trust, it commits a great wrong. Next to the necessity of fortifying the savings of workpeople intrusted to banks against all frand, misuse, or mismanagement, is the urgeney of maintaining intact all fraud, misuse, or mismanagement, is the urgency of maintaining intact the confidence of the public in all sound institutions. The savings-banks, without being charitable institutions, are This being the only manner in which more beneficent than any charitable in-stitution ever devised.
