Why the Barometer Rises and Falls.

First of all, what is a barometer? It is a tube or pipe, closed at one end and open at the other, made of some transparent material, such as glass, so that it can be seen through. This tube is filled with the melted metal called mercury, and, when quite full, the thumb is placed over the open end (so as to keep the mercury from falling out), and the tube is turned upside down. So the and you cannot make it run out into left in a hurry.

But if the barometer is watched it is going to be wet? . . . Now, dry air is much heavier than wet air, or air containing steam. The conse mercury flows out into the basin, and, or, as we usually express it, the barometer falls. Now, when the air is very wet there is, of course, more chance of rain than when it is dry, for rain is formed by the cooling of the steam contained in moist air .- Little Folks.

The earlier inhabitants of our country were pioneers, and became possessors gle. of great landed estates, from the profits of which they lived in something more than comfort, and were able to raise and educate their large families with comparative ease; but in the process of evolving the present state of the country, estates have been divided and subdivided till these old families are comparatively poor, and the young people now must look to their own exertions for a competence in life; but they would scorn the pretty log cabin where their ancestors lived on the outskirts of civilization, and they scorn also the more imposing farm-house, with its plain dressing and homely comforts. The sewing machine, the railway and express and telegram render it possible for the country matron or maid to dress as fashionably as the denizen of the city, and they do not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity; reporters and newspapers expatiate upon the silks and velvets and diamonds worn by ladies at receptions and entertainments, till a universal appetite for ostentatious display in dress has been created, and pervades every aspect of society, and is shadow of death, reached up his thin branches roots branches and the branches roots, is another illustration found in our expensive furniture, our white arms, clasped them around the of the same theory. over large houses, and a general con-other's neck and replied:

MADAM, I'LL EXPLAIN.-A Rochester paper tells this story: Quite a large party of gentlemen from the city went down to the bay and were hospitably and Worms. Among the party were several prominent men fr present and former official boards of the municipality—lawyers, commissioners and other equally well known influential at all is a question of which few will be citizens. No ladies were in the party, inclined to undertake the practical sogood time, everything, of course, being kept within safe and reasonable bounds. After an afternoon of good sport the party repaired to the Newport House to make preparations for their return to the city. They remained there until few days or at least a week. Access to late in the evening, and not until the majority of the guests of the house were retired to their rooms did the carriages begin to fill for the homeward journey. He may supplement a request for a nap-kin by desiring to know if you "will have it fried or boiled;" he has even betrayed the secrets of the prison house by carrying back what was handed to him as black coffee because it was perfectly brown. But even he was surpassed by one of the guests at a leading hotel the other day. This hotel is an advocate of protection as opposed to free trade, insomuch so that it does not allow private wine opened at table unless it pays a tariff to the house. This tariff is announced at the foot of the wine list six or in the cabalistic words, "Corkage, one dollar a bottle." This announcement was the means of entrapping a thirsty

At the End of the Rainbow According to popular belief, the extremities of a rainbow always touch streams, whence it draws water, by means of two large golden dishes. That is why it rains for three days after the appearance of a rainbow, because the water must fall again on the earth. Whoever arrives at the right moment at the spot where the rainbow is drinking, can take possession of the golden dish, which reflects all the colors of the rainbow; but if nobody is there the dishes are again drawn up into the clouds. Some say that the rainbow always lets a dish fall. This once hapways lets a dish fall. This once happened at Reutlingen, in Swabia. It

Living Without Food. It is true that many diseases, all the world over, arise from eating too much. But it is possible, on the other hand, to eat too little; and we doubt whether many could maintain a healthy existence on the meager diet of such medical philosophers as Cornaro. How long one could contrive to eat anything at all is a question of which few will be lution. Unfortunately it has been solved over and over again in the case of many an accident and many a deed of cruelty. Without something to eat water, however, makes a great difference.
