The farmers in the Western part of the State are strongly opposed to that part of the new game law which changes the time for killing squirrels from July 1 to September 1, as in the meantime these little animals, which are very numerous, may work destruction to the grain crop.—Record.

There is a fine story being told, that Booth, the murderer of President Lincoln, had not premeditated the assassination of the President previous to the day on which it was done. The story runs that on the evening on which he—Booth—committed the murder he placed a statement of his reasons for the assassination of Lincoln, in the keeping of an actor, with the request that the statement should be published in the newspapers after the flight of Booth, but the actor became frightened, and instead of publishing the statement he burnt it. The statement should have said, as the story now runs, that the planning of Surratt, Booth & Co. was to steal and carry the President into the Confederacy; but when Richmond fell and Lee surrendered, Booth was seized with a fit of frenzy and committed the murder. To all of which the New York Herald says:

There are some very romantic stories floating through the country villages of Virginia in regard to the assassination of Mr. Lincoln and the love affairs of John Wilkes Booth. One of them, to the effect that Booth and Robert Lincoln were in love with the daughter of the late Senator Hale, before either was hit—the tenth bullet killing Combs, who was a near relative of ex Gov. Leslie Combs of Kentucky.

A number of Indian relics were found with a skeleton in a lot in Danville. The skeleton lay with its head toward the east. On the finger of the skeleton were found eight rings of curious workmanship, one of which has a stone set in it resembling a diamond. With the skeleton were also found a pipe beautifully formed in the shape of a tomahawk, of red clay, highly polished, in which was part of a stem in a state of decay, which had been apparently used as a fine copper wire, a stone hatchet and a large number of arrow heads formed of flint.

John Isaac and Peter Hawn, bachelor brothers, whose ages range from sixty to sixty years, were situated in their own house, six miles from Huntingdon Pa., on the 19th inst., by two traps and beaten unmercifully, John and Isaac were beaten unconscious, and the latter is considered beyond recovery. The traps then knocked down the housekeeper, one of them holding her while his accomplice ransacked the house. They carried away with them bonds to the amount of $1,000 $54 in money and some other valuables. Upon the alarm being given they were pursued, but turned to flight, their pursuers, the chase was then given up, but now the entire neighborhood has been aroused

Attempting to recover it, she slipped and fell, sinking into the water. She gave three piercing screams and was carried away by the surf just as her father appeared in the doorway.

It is scarcely more than 120 years since Col. Francis Towley, George Fletcher, and seven other Jacobites were hanged on Kennington Common, London, cut down, disembowelled, beheaded, quartered, their hearts tossed into a fire, from which one of them was snatched by a bystander, who devoured it to show his loyalty. Wolfe afterward saw their heads on Temple Bar, and says that people used to make a trade of letting out apyglasses to look at them at a halpenny a head. The spikes which supported the heads were only removed in the present century.

At Yengerly, in the town of Washington, near Ellenville, Ulster county, N. Y., on Tuesday morning, Frederick Kimball entered his son Richard's room and attacked the latter's wife with a small axe, inflicting three frightful wounds which will prove fatal. The son was awakened by the first blow and fired a revolver at his father's assault. The flash of the revolver disclosed the fact that the murderer was his father. He fired a second shot, which took effect in his father's face. The murderer was put under guard and a coroner's examination committed to jail. The cause of the assault was the dislike on the part of the father to the son's wife.

It is remarkable that the Democratic House of Representatives have found sufficient time, outside of investigation, to look carefully after the material interests of the great Capital city of the nation.

While the city has been very much improved within the past few years, and its streets and avenues transformed from a series of mud puddles into beautiful drives, bordered with trees, so as to give it the name of "a forest city," yet the burden of taxation has been purely local, and the general government has borne no just part of it, though the Government buildings and grounds are more than one-half of the property.

Congress has now come forward and assumed the interest on one-half of the District of Columbia, amounting to about $24,000,000, which is virtually taking off one-half of the debt itself. This is but right, for Washington belongs not to the District of Columbia, nor to any one section, but to the whole country, and deserves the generous support and fostering care of every American patriot, so that its advancement be worthy the rapid strides of this great and glorious republic.

A HORRIBLE STATEMENT.

The Traffic in Corpses—Scenes in a Michigan College.

In the search for the body of young Devine, which was taken from the grave just before that of John Scott Harrison was, Detective Snelmaker, of Cincinnati, visited the Miami Medical College of Cincinnati. He found in the cellar of that institution buried the body of a young woman.

The janitor told him that about a month previous a body-snatcher, who went by the name of Gabrielle, had come to him and said that Dr. Glenn had given him permission to use the cellar of the college to store "stiffs" in and to prepare them for shipment to Ann Arbor, where they would be put into pickle for the use of the students of the medical colleges there next winter.

The detective visited Ann Arbor, and a special dispatch to the Enquirer says: "There, ranged along the side of the walls, were three monstrous vats containing a large number of dead bodies floating in brine. Piled high above these were a number of empty coffins, rudely broken open and riddled of their precious dead while upon a rough table in the center of the room was a mixture of red paint and nitrate of silver used for injecting the veins. A paint-mill on a table at hand showed that large quantities of this mixture were prepared and used, and scattered around the room promiscuously were empty boxes and barrels, and trays and tins, in which the bodies had been shipped hither from Cincinnati and other points."

Search for the body of young Devins, whose grave at North Bend, Ohio, was robbed some time ago, was prosecuted vigorously with the aid of detectives, after the finding of the Hon. J. Scott Harrison's body in the medical college at Cincinnati. The body was traced to Ann Arbor, Mich., and there discovered in the pickling vat of the medical college. It was taken back and re-interred at North Bend with impressive ceremonies. In the meantime, the robbery of graves at North Bend was brought to the attention of the grand jury at Cincinnati, and after a careful investigation they returned indictments against Dr. Morton, the resurrectionist, and J. Q. Marshall, janitor of the Ohio Medical College. Dr. Morton's whereabouts are not known, but Marshall will be held for trial.

A Human Skeleton Inside of a Horse.

[From the Virginia City Enterprise.]

A miner in the Black Hills, writing to a friend in this city, tells of a horrible reminder of the fearful snow storms of last winter, and of the perils of those who were caught out and lost their way on the plains. He says that recently, while he and two others were crossing the country, they came upon the skeleton of a horse, within which was the skeleton of a man, with the grimacing skull looking out at them from between the ribs of the animal, like a prisoner peering through the bars of his cell. The two skeletons told the whole story. The man had killed his horse, cut him open, and crawled inside of him, thinking to thus escape perishing of cold, but the flesh of the animal froze solid, and the man was as safe a prisoner as if he had been shut in by walls of iron. The wolves and carrion birds had stripped the greater part of the flesh from both skeletons. The miner concludes his description by saying: "It was a sight I shall never forget. I can see it now whenever I close my eyes."

Low skeptical fellows are always "exposing spirits." The mediums scarcely get hold of a good thing, when somebody comes a grab game of some sort and breaks up the seance. It is a very strange case even Daniel Webster was treated with signs and discords. A base-minded, scheming man obtained entrance to a seance where Daniel Webster habitually materialized, walked from the cabinet across the room, looking as he had looked in life, but making not the slightest sound of a footstep. This base-minded man tossed a number of large trunk tacks, which fell very large heads and always fall points upward, upon the floor. The consequence was that when the expounder of the constitution came out of the cabinet and began to walk across the room he suddenly paused, and lifting one foot, applied his hand to the sole thereof. Upon taking another step he paused again, and in a low voice remarked, "Ouch!" Shortly after this he lost his balance and sat down on the floor, and immediately became very profane, and retreated into his cabinet greatly disgusted.
