A MOTHER'S REVERY.

They tell me to be happy. With all these things to do— With Jimmie's little paws to mend. And Jimmie's dresses, too. While dinner waits for serving; Sons will be delirious come. With appetite, all sharpened so. When they arrive at home. Then Will dislikes to see me. In this old dress so grey; He told me this morning twice Before he went away.

What Carl Brought his Mother.

"What shall I bring you from town to-day, mother? Mrs. Bradley looked at the bright, cherry face of her son, and had not more than fourteen, but unusually tall and well developed for his years. "I don't know that we need anything, do we, Carl? That is, anything we can do without, you know. Here Mrs. Bradley paused, as if unwilling to sadden that brave, hopeful spirit by alluding to the burden that weighed so heavily upon her heart. "You are a good boy, Carl. But I know, too, that this is your birthday; and that the best mother and prettiest little woman in the world deserves a present of some kind. So what shall I do? "Mrs. Bradley blushed and smiled like a girl in her teens. She had not only been remarkably pretty in her youth, but was still looking almost too young to be the mother of a boy as old as Carl.
