HOW THE PARSON BROKETHE SABBATH

On the grave of Parson Williams, The grass is brown and bleached, It is more than fifty winters Since he lived and laughed and preached.

But his memory in New England. No winter snows can kill; Of his goodness and his drollness Countless legends linger still.

And among these treasured legends Most Orthodox, on grace, When a sound of distant thunder Proke the quiet of the place.

Now the meadows of the Croeby's Lay full within his sight, As he glanced from out the window Which stood open on his right.

And the green and fragrant haycocks By the acres there did stand : Not a meadow like the deacon's Far or near in all the land Quick and loud the claps of thunder

Went rolling through the skies And the Parson saw his Deacon "Now my brethren," called the Parson,

And he called with might and main, "We must get in Brother Crosby's hav. 'Tis our duty now most plain!' And he shut the great red Bible,

Not a man could run more swiftly Than the Parson in that town. With a will they worked and shouted And cleared the fields apace :

And he tossed his sermon down ;

And the Parson led the singing. While the sweat rolled down his face And it thundered fiercer, louder

And dark grow east and west ; But the hay was under cover. And the Farson had worked the best. And again in new and pulnit

Their places took composed ; And the parson preached his sermon To ' fifteenthly," where it closed.
