In the early days of the cotton-spin ning machinery, a great deal of trouble then formed portions of looms. These filaments soon clogged the wheels and other parts of the machinery, and rendered it necessary that they should be cleaned, involving much loss of time.

ging by the cotton, and Sir Robert, or Mr. Peel, as he was then, spent vast sums in experiments. He employed some of the ablest machinists in the kingdom; but spite of all they could do the inconvenience remained, and the evil appeared unsurmountable.

Of course, these delays seriously affected the wages of the operatives, who, on Saturdays generally came short in proportion to stoppages during the previous days. It was noticed, however, that one man always drew his full pay -his work was always accomplished; in fact, his loom never had to stop, while every other in the factory was

Mr. Peel was insormed of this, and knew there must be a secret somewhere It was important that it should be discovered if possible. The man was watched, but all to no purpose. His fellow-workmen tried to "pump" him, but they couldn't. At last Mr. Peel sent for the man into his private office He was a rough Lancashire man, unable to read or write-little better than a mere animal. He entered the presence pulling his forelock, and shuf-"Thank Yer Honor, an' may ye nivir fling on the ground with his clumsy, great wooden shoes.

"Dick," said Mr. Peel, "Ferguso the overlooker, tells me your bobbins are always clean. Is that so?" "E'es, master, 't be."

"Well, Dick, how do you manage it Have you any objections to let know?" "Why, Master Phil, 't be a saort of secret loike, ye see; and if oi told, tothers' know's much as oi," replied Dick.

"Of course, Dick, I will give you omething if you will tell me-and if you can make all the looms in the factory work as smooth as yours."

"Every one 'n them, Master Phil." "Well, what shall I give you? Nam your price Dick, and let me have your secret. Cunning Dick grinned, scratched his head, shuffled for a few minutes, while Mr. Peel anxiously awaited his reply. The cotton lord thought his servant would probably ask a hundred pounds or so, which he would most willingly have given him. Presently Dick said, "Well, Master Phil. I'll tell 'ee all about it, if you'll
