A Remarkable Somnambulist. An elderly gentleman was on the, witness stand, and seemed to be exceedingly anxious to convince the court and jury that he possessed uncommon watchfulness at night, and of being aroused from slumber by the slightest neise in his room, declaring that it would be next to an impossibility for any one to enter or approach very near without arousing his cat-like vigils. One of the attorneys who seemed to be very much interested in the old gentleman's recital, in cross-examining the witness asked if it were not a fact that he was a great and sound sleeper. "I don't think I am," was the reply. "But do you not sometimes fall asleep at the dinner table?" "Sometimes when I am tired I fall into a doze," was the reply. "But that does not prevent my going on with the dinner, as I know what is going on all the time." "Well," said attorney, "you are the most remarkable man that I ever heard of. I suppose you sometimes sleep when you are walking." "I don't know that I can say that exactly," rejoined the somnambulist: "but I tell you what I have done. When I was a boy and used to go to spelling school, I used to get into a sleeping fit, but would keep right along and spell the whole school down in the end! "Possible!" said the attorney. Three Days of Terro

When Maguire, the man who was recently rescued from an old shaft near Virginia City, Nevada, into which he had fallen, had been thoroughly washed, dressed in clean clothes, and placed on a comfortable bed, he seemed perfectly happy. After he had been fed on beef tea and given a proper amount of whisky, he was able to converse quite freely and comfortably, and gave Dr. Kirby a full account of how he came to fall into the shaft, and his feelings while lying there alone so long in the dark and horrible hole. He had been working at the New York bakery, South C street, and says that in company with a Mr. Zim-merman, also of the bakery named, he was about town drinking, and got pretty "full. About four o'clock in the morning, Zimmerman left to go home, but he concluded not to go with him. He thought that as he had been drinking rather too much, a walk would do him good-that he would walk off the effects of what he had been drinking before going to bed. Besides he considered that as it was Sunday, and he had no work to do, there was no need of his being in a nurry either about going to bed or getting He started out on the Geiger grade and finally coming to the tunnel, which nearly a mile north of town, he entered it, and for so doing gives a very satisfactory reason. I felt that could I have one big drink of water I would willingly die, was worse than all my hurts. finally became so terrible that I took up handfuls of mud and chewed it for its cool ness and the little moisture that was in it. He says that he slept at times, but only short naps. He did a good deal of shout ing at first, but afterward only occasionall and in fits of despair-when it seemed good to hear the sound of his own voice-for l seemed useless to try and make any one hear. He had no idea how long he was in the winze, but it sometimes seemed that h had always been there. When he heard the echoing steps of the two men in the tunnel and caught the sound of their voices he felt that his last chance for life was to make himself heard. He cleared his mouth of the mud he was holding in it and shouted with all his strength.
