THE WIND AND STREAM.

A brook came stealing from the ground, You scarcely saw its silvery gleam Among the herbs that hung around The borders of that winding stream A pretty stream, a placid stream, A softly gliding, ba-hful stream.

A breeze came wandering from the sky, Light as the whisper of a dream; He put the o'erhanging grasses by, And gaily stooped to kess the stream The pretty stream, the flattered stream, The shy, yet unreluctant stream.

The water as the wind passed o'er, Shot upward many a glancing beam, Dimpled and quivered more and more, And tripped along a livelier stream, The flattered stream, the simpering stream The fond, delighted, silly stream.

Away the airy wanderer flow To where the fields with blossoms teem, To sparkling streams and rivers blue, And left alone that little stream-The flattered stream, the cheated stream. complished.

The sad, forsaken, lonely stream.

That careless wind no more came back, He wanters yet the fields, I deem, But on its melancholy track Compla ning went that little stream-The cheated stream, the hopeless stream The ever-murmuring, moaning stream.

cannot be shown that the halls are used for any other purpose. The offices necessary for the management could be rented for £100 a year. And it may be as " as contended by Mr. Alderman Cotton, in the recent debate in the mated rental and actual rents; that the income actually received by the companies in respect of their city properly is considerably less than the beforementioned figure; but if the companies deliberately lease away their most valnable estates for less than their real creasing in value. The new "Doomsday Book" also shows that the city guilds are the owners of estates of more or less value in pearly every shire in England and Wales, to say nothing of estates producing some $90,000 a year in rents held by eight of the large companies in the north of Ireland. Their investments in the funds are also very considerable. We have, indeed, little doubt that £1,000,000 a year would, if anything underestimate the annual val-
