GARFIELD is the new United States Senator from Ohio.

The election contest case of Curtin against Yoern is receiving the attention of Congress.

INDIA is excited over the appearance of a new teacher of religion, or a teacher of a new religion.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is about to lay four tracks between Philadelphia and Lancaster.

GOVERNOR HOYT has appointed Col. Stanley Woodward, of Wilkesbarre, to be additional law judge of Luzerne county.

SENATOR JOHN A. LEMON, of Blair county, is a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Auditor General. He has many friends.

For impudence, one may be pointed to GONZALEZ, who but recently shot twice at the King of Spain with the object of killing him. He has asked the King to pardon him.

"The native Georgians, who guide the revenue officers in their raids on moonshiners say that the latter always sing the long-meter doxology when they have killed one of the raiders."

"An Indiana man's proudest boast was that he took such pains with his property and will that the lawyers wouldn't make a penny off his estate. He is dead, and there are seventeen lawyers engaged in the suit over the will."

A SCIENTIFIC man has written an article on the destruction of Salem and Georgetown, saying the cities were destroyed by a shower of meteors, and that the fire was rained from heaven in the month of September.

"GEN. WARREN, who was relieved of the command of the Fifth Army Corps at the battle of Five Forks, by Gen. Sheridan, having requested an inquiry into that matter, the court is now in session in New York city, Gen. Hancock presiding."

"The pastor of the Seventh Presbyterian Church in New York refused the use of the building for the funeral of a dead man had been a Free Mason, and was to be buried with Masonic honors."

The North American says: The conduct of the Greenbackers reminds one of the old story about the man whose head was so neatly shaved off by the executioner that he was not aware the ceremony had been performed until a casual sneeze shook his intellect into the basket. Down at Washington De La Matry and the rest are carrying on at a great rate, making motions, proposing amendments, and all the rest of it, just as though the party had not since last fall been as dead as a door nail.

"The Altona Radical advocates the claims of Hon. John A. Lemon, of Blair county, the popular Senator from the 25th district, for the Republican nomination for Auditor General. The Radical says that 'in Col. John A. Lemon, Central Pennsylvania presents its representative man. Born and reared among a people famed for labor in the mines and mills, the furnaces and forests, he has been from early life closely identified with the great coal and lumber interests of the State, and with the laboring men who have so largely contributed to make this State what they are.'" Col. Lemon is now serving his third term in the State Senate."

MR. MACFARLANE insists that the crystals he has artificially produced are genuine diamonds, and Professor Maskelyne, of the British Museum, has suspended judgment pending further examination. But even if the claims of the discoverer are well founded, the world will be in no way benefited. Diamonds are valued mainly for their rarity. If they are to be manufactured like glass, a great many people will be made poorer, and no one will be any better off.—North American.

THE Harrisburg Telegraph writes: Famine in Europe, instead of decreasing, is steadily on the increase. In Great Britain there is far more suffering than the newspapers published in England and Ireland care to relate. Scotland is much more favorably organized in labor and supplied with the necessities of life than England or Ireland. On the continent of Europe the famine, which is not general, is felt in Germany, Russia, Portugal, and Turkey in Europe, and will make a demand for American breadstuffs this year equal to that of last year, not to mention the famine which is not in the ground, and land on which to raise corn and rice, may put it in these crops this year and be able to sell whatever he raises at good prices as soon as it is harvested and threshed. The people of the old world, as well as those of Asia now warring with Christian England, will want all the surplus grain which can be raised in the United States and Territories this year, and the prices will be at paying figures.

THE following telegram was dispatched from Harrisburg on Saturday and explains itself: Superintendent Wickenshaw is now preparing and will next week issue warrants to school districts in the State covering the year ended June, 1879, for one million dollars, the amount due them from the State for that period. According to the Superintendent's estimate the Commonwealth owes the schools about $2,000,000. State Treasurer Noyes says the Treasury will be in a condition to cash about half the amount of the warrants the present month, and the remainder will be honored by the first of June next. Auditor General Schell will state in his annual report, which will be out in a week, that by a rigid collection of taxes under the revenue law, the deficiency in the Treasury, amounting to over one million seven hundred thousand dollars, will be made up in two years.

The Situation in Maine.

Order-loving, and law-abiding people hoped that when the Legislature of Maine came to be organized, which should have been done last Wednesday, that Garcelon, the Democratic Governor, would not persist in his course of usurpation, but that he would heed the opinion of the Supreme Court of the State, and recall the certificates of election that he and his council had issued to as many Democrats and fusionists as they thought necessary to count in a Democratic Governor. But in that hope the country has been disappointed.

He spurned the opinion of the Supreme Court, and convened his Legislature on Wednesday, on his own plan, which was directly opposed to the way pointed out by the Supreme Court, and the majority of the people; but the result was anything but satisfactory to the usurper. A number of members that had been counted in, were too light-hearted to be the instrument of fraud, and would not act with the Governor. The usurper and his friends tried to break the force or influence of the men who refused to work with the Governor in his scheme of revolution, by declaring that they had been bought over by the Republicans; but that dodge failed. They then declared that two other fusionists had been offered $1,000 each by a Republican lawyer—White by name—to come over to the Republican side. Mr. White, as the Indian says, "has put on the paint," and will show that these charges are black charges.

During the confusion that ensued the great body of the Republicans kept away from the State House, and the Democrats and fusionists had not the necessary number to organize and count in their Governor. Garcelon's usurpation still did not work satisfactorily, and when the time came for the new Governor to take his seat, the new Governor had not been named by the Legislature, and the State was without a Chief Executive. By virtue of the Constitution of Maine when the office of Governor becomes vacant the President of the Senate becomes Governor. However, in this case when Garcelon retired from the office, on Wednesday, he handed the Government of State over to General Chamberlain, commander of the military forces of the Commonwealth. The General held the State House, and Democrats and fusionists were at sea from Wednesday to Saturday, doing their best to organize and carry out the programme of the usurper Garcelon.

On Sunday the President of the Senate—James D. Lamson—expressed a willingness to exercise the office of Governor, as provided by the Constitution of the State for cases of vacancy in the gubernatorial chair.

On Monday evening at 6 o'clock, when the fusionists were at the State House, and the Republican Senators and Representatives went to the State House, and proceeded to organize the Legislature. The President of the Senate called on General Chamberlain to use the military to put out such people as crowded into the chamber, but he replied that his duty is simply to preserve the peace and take care of the public property.

Both houses appointed committees to ask the opinion of the Supreme Court touching the legality of the Legislature as just organized.

RELATIVE to the famine in Germany a dispatch from the capital of that country, under date of last Friday, the 9th inst., says: In the lower house of the Prussian Diet the Minister of Finance in asking a vote for the relief of the sufferers by the famine in Upper Silesia, announced that the government also contemplated the construction of two branch railway lines in Silesia, which would require a grant of twelve and a half million marks. He said that 105,000 persons at present needed relief, and that provision for these had been made up to the end of the month.

Both houses, he said, hoped to effect lasting improvements by extensive drainage works and the promotion of local industries.

How is this as an opinion from one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of Virginia? Judge Francis T. Anderson, of the Virginia Supreme Court, recently expressed an opinion in favor of granting a divorce to a woman on the ground that her husband had become a Republican, saying "he had deserted his friends and gone over to the enemy, and had joined in waging upon them a war more cruel than the war of arms. It was the perjury—the moral trait—which she felt entitled him, and which would likely exclude him from the best society of the State. But the majority of the Court disagreed with Judge Anderson."

THE Chicago Tribune publishes a history of the celebrated case of Bashford against Barstow, over the possession of the Governor's office in Wisconsin in 1877, which has points similar to the Democratic fraud in Maine. Barstow and his Democratic returning board attempted, by technicalities and fraud, to thwart the will of the majority as expressed at the ballot box. He was sworn in and would have assumed the duties of Governor, but for the interposition of an honest and fearless Supreme Court. The case of Barstow was not so wicked as that of Garcelon, because he only lacked a few votes in the face of a plurality of 17,000 votes.

"PROFESSOR SWING, the noted educator of Chicago, has refused an addition of $3,000 to his salary of $7,000, add Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of the same city, has also refused an advance of $1,000 in his salary of $5,000. These are liberal salaries, but the usefulness of Dr. Swing and Lorimer proves that they deserve all that they receive."

A Deaf Mute Reveals a Crime.

From the Salt Lake Herald.

Last night Joseph Bernard, a deaf and dumb young man, aged about 21 years, caught into a police station, and by his actions manifested a strong desire to impart some information of a very important character. After watching his gestures for a time, and conversing with him in that manner as near as could be understood, it was learned that he wished to say something to the following effect: He had just returned from Park City or vicinity, and on Sunday night three men had broken into the house of a person who was sleeping. Admission was gained by removing a latch lock. Two of the men were masked, while the third had a heavy beard on his face. The inmate of the house had been sleeping, but must have awakened and arisen, as one of the masked men stabbed him with a long knife and then cut him across the abdomen, lengthwise, and from the description the cut must have been a terrible one. The robber with the beard was then shot in the knee, while the party stabbed sank into a chair and died. One of the robbers forced open a desk and took therefrom a large roll of money, amounting, according to Bernard's own figures, to some $13,300. The robbers then made their escape. From his description, they had their clothes torn badly, and he showed the manner in which they were shot, and how the leg of the man shot in the knee had swollen a great deal, and all three were making for this city as rapidly as possible on foot. He showed by the watch they might be here early this morning, and he wanted them arrested. He evinced a genuine appreciation of the wants of the three, as he drew the picture of a gallows on the slate and significant put his fingers to his throat, rolled up his eyes and went through a remarkably natural choking scene, while he indicated by three of his fingers that the hanging bed would not be complete without three persons. He was very earnest, and some are inclined to believe there is some foundation in the story. He repeated the pantomime several times, and each time it was strikingly the same as the first.

The name of Wm. Markin is on the arm in India ink. He has been seen about the neighborhood since Friday.

A dispatch from Pottsville, dated Jan. 11th, says: "Edward Gurley, a Mollie Maguire, of Columbia county, who is charged with the murder of John Ginn, was an old man in Centralia on July 25, 1876, since which time he has been a fugitive from justice returned to his family at Centralia to day and delivered himself up to the authorities. After a hearing was committed to jail at Bloomsburg for trial. At his trial it is expected he will turn state evidence and expose the participants in a number of murders committed in the vicinity of Centralia, which was the scene of many bloody tragedies during the reign of the Mollie Maguire. During Gurley's hearing Michael Brogan, who recently married a daughter of Ginn's, became very much excited, and drawing a revolver attempted to shoot him. The town is very much excited."

While two men were sinking a well near Millersburg, Dauphin county, last Friday, a rock was encountered, in which a blast was inserted and the face ignited. The explosion not following, speedily, one of the workmen, named Hollebach, approached the well opening to look down. Just as he did so the charge exploded, throwing up rock in large quantities, breaking the windlass into atoms. Hollebach was carried a distance of about 20 feet with the platform and violently thrown against the timbers. He had several holes in his head and was severely injured, and he died of his wounds a few minutes later. The explosion was caused by the death of Monday morning. The unfortunate man leaves a wife and two children.

A despatch from Lancaster last Friday says: Last night about midnight eight masked robbers entered the residence of Jacob Mishley, an old miller aged about 60 years, living by himself in a small house by the side of Onestoga creek, on the line between Lancaster and Dauphin counties, several miles from this city. Upon entering the house Mishley lay in bed and received a blow immediately and demanded all his money. Fearing violence he gave them $150, all he had in the house. After receiving the money the robbers went through every room in the house and ransacked all the drawers. When about leaving they struck Mishley over the head with a heavy club which fell him to the floor in an unconscious condition. The old man was not discovered until early this morning, when a neighboring farmer, seeing everything dark around the house, investigated the cause and found Mishley bleeding on the floor. Medical aid was quickly summoned. Upon examination it was found that his head was terribly battered. The police authorities were notified, but up to-night no clue has been obtained. This district has been troubled considerably by such desperadoes.

There are 16,000 locomotives in the United States.

Wonder who this is? A common vagrant and drunkard, now in the changing hands of Leadville, under the assumed name of Stormont, is said to have been formerly a United States Senator from an eastern State.

At a funeral in Scotland, recently, the mourners got "high," and when the coffin was being lowered into the grave one of those assisting in that just sad office fell into the tomb along with the remains, becoming so firmly jammed between the coffin and the side of the grave as to be extricated with difficulty.

It is fashionable in Massachusetts, this winter, to ride in the oldest sleighs that can be obtained. A wealthy individual has proudly owned as to body, while the leather wings of the dash-board are more ancient by half a century.

A man had a tooth extracted by a Chicago dentist, and expressed regret at the loss. A girl, whose jaws were overworked with teeth, entered the office to have two of them taken out. The dentist suggests the experiment of dentifering one of these sound teeth to the vacancy in the man's mouth, and the operation was performed, and the girl was told to fight the man walking nearest behind him. It was some time before she could be made to understand the situation.

A telegram from Brownsville, Tennessee, says that George Williams, a negro, who was in jail there for stealing, knocked down his keeper on Sunday and escaped. He was recaptured, but while being handcuffed he snatched the jailer's pistol and fired two shots at him, and reached the top of the stairs, where a negro tripped him and he fell to the bottom, firing at his pursuers as he lay there. Jumping up, he fired at Henry Oppenheimer, who stood in his way. Oppenheimer returned the shot, the ball striking Williams near the heart. He died shortly after.

Martin Bushner, a saloon-keeper of Allegheny City, had reason to suspect that a certain customer was in the habit of tapping his till. On Sunday morning he both thought himself and his till, and proceeded to watch the supposed thief. There was a good-sized spigot in the box and through this spigot Bushner thought he would be able to get air, so he closed the heavy lid of the box over him. Thirty minutes passed away and it began to get close. He endeavored to open the door again, but imagined his horror when he found that it was fastened down. He had forgotten about the latch when he shut it. After a while the door of the saloon opened and in came this same young fellow. Through the spigot Bushner claims that he saw him extract the money from the drawer. The man was nearly smothered and tried to attract the thief's attention by kicking against the side of the box, but the young man thought that some one was coming in and he had a hasty retreat. It was three hours before Bushner was released.

Mrs. Eng, of New Albany, Ind. (no relation of Mr. Eng of the late State Senate firm of Chung and Eng), recently lost her husband, and temporarily put his body in the city vault, till she bought a lot. A week after everything was ready, and wish her to take another look at the late Mr. Eng, she had the coffin lid screwed. It was the same coffin and grave, but she was not satisfied with the right lid and down that it wasn't her husband's face that she saw. She told her daughter, who said she had noticed the same thing, and recognized the face as that of Sam Baroff, a drunkard, who died last summer and was buried in the Potters' Field at Jeffersonville. She hired a colored man, who knew her husband, to dig up the body again, and he says: "I knew Mr. Eng well. His hair was thick, coarse and very black, and his eyes were blue. The head in that coffin is not Mr. Eng's head. But I know whose head it is. It is the head of Mr. Sam Baroff. I knew Mr. Baroff as well as I ever knew any man. The hair on the head in the coffin is only a small patch on the back of the head, and it is gray, and the whiskers are also gray." The body was buried again, and it is going to be dug up once more, to prove that some force of the resurrectionists have been at work.

In Louisiana you can see robins tumbling around as if they were drunk. That's what the negroes say about them, and a Louisiana hunter says he used to catch them in great numbers when he was a boy, growing up under the impression that they were drunk, but when he was grown he learned better, in this way: "I discovered one on the ground, seeming very drunk, though he could fly, but not very far. I caught him, and, upon examination, found his crop very much distended with Guinea berries. He kept his mouth wide open, but made little noise, though he evidently tried to. The berries could be seen in the throat. I pressed two or three of them up and pulled them out, and in a few minutes he was fluttering and whistling, and when liberated, flew away as rapidly as if nothing had ever been the matter with him. These berries fall late in the winter; the moisture of the ground puffs them up so that they become as round and full as cherries, and walking on them causes a continued popping, not very loud, but distinct. The robins swallow the berries in such quantities as to fill the crop so full that, either from the peculiar formation of the berry or their swelling with the moisture and warmth, they press against the windpipe and produce a partial stangulation and intoxication." So the robins are not really drunk.

Poenocke City remains at white heat. The Presbyterian Church, in which Ayletote, the accused, is an elder, is divided on the question of his guilt or innocence of too much sweetness with one of the sisters. During the Sunday morning services of a week ago, at the time appointed for delivering the sermon, Preacher Bowen arose and delivered a most scathing diatribe not only against Mr. Ayletote, but against the whole community. He came to Poenocke City, he said, a town of churches, supposing he was coming among a Christian and moral community, but instead he found himself among a people so directly the opposite of this, that he was ashamed to acknowledge his residence there; that a few days before when in Philadelphia he was ashamed to own to a brother clergyman and did not acknowledge that he belonged to Poenocke City. He continued in this manner, cutting rebuke of the abuses of which he complained and ended by resigning his pastorate over the church. The excitement throughout the county is intense and many of the best people sustain Mr. Bowen in the course he has taken.
