

The Philadelphia Permanent Exhibition is to be continued.

The Indiana Supreme Court says smoking is a necessity to those who have formed the habit, and therefore it is legally right for cigar stores to be open on Sunday.

On Saturday a week two young Philadelphians went down to Delaware State and fought a duel. Exchanged shots once. No blood was shed. The trouble was about a respectable lady.

A ser of men, who are opposed to Grant, threaten that if he is nominated that they will put an Independent candidate in the field, to defeat him with. They talk of defeating Col. A. K. McClure in the field. Don't you do it, Colonel. Remember, Greeley.

Some time ago Senator Don Cameron delivered an able speech on the question of inter-State commerce, and so convincing has been his efforts that the Senate Committee has reported in favor of the appointment of a commission to consider upon the enactment of laws to regulate the commerce between the States. The Senator maintains that the question of freight discrimination can be managed only by an inter-State system.

One of the ablest of the Confederate Generals—General Mahone—is a light weight man, weighing less than one hundred pounds. He has been elected a United States Senator, and though nominally a Readjuster, holds his head level when he talks about the past, present, and possible future of Virginia. He says Virginia has lived long enough under the resolutions of '38, having grown poorer year by year, and that the time has come for abandoning the policy of reaction. He hits the nail squarely on the head. More power to his elbow.—North American.

The five hundred preachers who composed the Wyoming Methodist Episcopal Conference, while in session last Thursday, at Stratton, Pa., expressed themselves on the Legislative Riot Damage Bribery cases as follows: Resolved, in view of the corruptions connected with the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, we, the members of the Wyoming Conference, residing in the State, pray the Board of Parishes, the Judge of the Court and the Governor of the State that the persons so convicted of bribery and corruption be brought to speedy punishment, that their great crime be not condoned and that the Board of Parishes, the Judge of the Court and the Governor be notified of the action of this conference.

A number of people in this country are trying to create an impression that the outrageous hazing of the colored cadet, Whittaker, at West Point, was done by himself. The cadet had been beaten, had his ears partly cut off, and was tied, and bound to the bed in his own room, by the parties who assaulted him. Many are the criticisms that have been awakened into life by the effort to create the impression that the cadet was himself particularly on the point of cutting his own ears. Among the keenest criticisms is one from Congressman Harris, of Virginia, who says this Whittaker cut his ears in his district, in which one of the combatants had his ear bitten off. He picked it up, threateningly shook it at his foe, and told him he would not let the penitentiary pay anything in biting his ear off. The biter said, "You're a liar; you bit it off yourself."

History repeats itself. After the Christian religion became the religion of Rome, after it became the Roman Catholic religion, paintings representing the eventful periods in the life of Christ were placed on the walls in the government and church buildings throughout the length and breadth of the Roman Empire. How history repeats itself may be learned from the question of paintings, coupled with the fact that an American Congressman has a bill in Congress that provides for the placing of the same kind of paintings that were placed in the public buildings of Rome, in the Capitol at Washington. A dispatch relative to the question says: Delegate Downey, of Wyoming, introduced a bill in the House with the preamble: "Whereas the people of the United States are a Christian people, and firmly believe in God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, etc., etc., reciting the balance of the Apostles' Creed—and providing for an appropriation of $500,000 to be expended under the directions of the architect of the Capitol to commemorate in suitable paintings by the great living artists of this century upon the walls of the National Capitol the birth, life and death of our Savior, Jesus Christ, as told in the four gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John.

Indiana Democrats Indulge in a Negro Hunt.

A dispatch on the night of the 15th inst. says that the Democracy of Shelby county, Ind., enjoyed an exciting negro hunt to-day. The man who was shot was the same man who had the presumption to vote in the recent elections, and when set upon by a gang of Democratic ruffians, attempted to defend himself. This morning he had some words with a farmer named Wilson, who lives a few miles from Shelbyville. Wilson, who is a faithful Democrat, immediately went to town and secured an order for the negro's arrest on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. A Democratic justice of the peace placed the warrant in the hands of the leader of the gang which assaulted the negro on election day. He immediately ordered an armed posse and started in pursuit. The negro, apprehending trouble, secured a double-barreled shot-gun, and, taking his carpet-bag, started for a safer place. He was soon overtaken, however, by the posse, which fired a broadside at him from revolvers. At the first fire he threw up his hands, saying, "My God! I'm shot!" The brave pursuers fired several more shots at the man, and then secured him and brought him back to Shelbyville in triumph. A bullet had entered his thigh, inflicting a severe wound. He was locked up in jail on a charge of carrying concealed weapons with intent to commit murder.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be and he is hereby authorized and directed to attend in person or by deputy the International Sheep and Wool Show, to be held in the Centennial Buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and eighty, and to make a full and complete report of the same.

Approved.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES, President. WASHINGTON, April 18, 1880.

A Shocking Accident.

A dispatch from Harrisburg, last Thursday, says: Just as the men on the night train at the Pennsylvania Station got up at Steedon, were getting out of the train, an accident occurred which seriously injured nine men, two fatally. As one of the big converters, containing six tons of molten steel, was being lowered, it dropped suddenly, scattering the hot metal all over the workmen. J. B. Martin, the foreman of the turn, and Daniel Daylor, employed in the pit, saw the converter swing and ran out of the way at the same time, calling to the others, but they were too late. It was all the work of an instant, and the first intimation the other hands in different parts of the mill had of the accident was on hearing the cries and shrieks of the men who were covered with the red hot metal. The scene that ensued beggars description. The hose was turned on some of the men who were lying on the edge of the pit, powerless to rise, with their clothing in flames and the blistering metal burning into their flesh, and willing hands lifted the unfortunates and carried them to the engine house. There were nine of them hurt, of whom George Yost and Albert A. Westbrook were fatally burned, the former's clothing being one mass of flame. Westbrook lay on the edge of the pit, burning, when the water from the hose was played on him. Yost died at noon and Westbrook a little later.

Within the past few years certain parts of Berks and Chester counties have been troubled by frequent and bold robberies. Lately the robbers have been so emboldened as to write "signed letters to parties who were seeking their arrest, threatening vengeance if they are not left alone, to pursue their catching and plundering work. But the end has come, as may be learned from a recent dispatch from Reading, which says:

Lewis Robinson, a young farmer of Honeybrook, Chester county, the son of a wealthy land holder, was arrested a few days ago and held in $1,000 bail to answer for a robbery committed by the bold gang of robbers operating in that section this spring. In young Robinson's house two large wagon loads of plunder were captured. It was also alleged that he shipped to the New York markets tons of stolen poultry and produce. Lap robes, blankets, harness, wearing apparel, silver ware, farming utensils, guns, pistols, and many valuable household articles were captured in the culprit's home. Many of these were marked with their owners' names. Young Robinson acknowledged his guilt. A valuable silk dress pattern led to the discovery of the criminal. It was made up and worn by his wife, and subsequently she sent it to a dressmaker to have it altered. Here it was recognized as the property of another. The young wife did not know it had been stolen, and in this instance she was fortunate in the rich farmer of that section. It is expected that the entire band of robbers will be arrested in a few days.

STATE ITEMS.

A West Chester lady was nearly lifted from the ground by the high wind filling her four-story bonnet. Fortunately for her, the strings gave way. On Monday a week, while Mrs. H. Wiley, living near Langhorne, Montgomery county, was attempting to dip water from a cistern, she lost her balance, and, falling into the tank, was drowned. Mrs. Kalb, of Ross township, Allegheny county, who has been deranged for some time, committed suicide on Monday a week, by drowning herself in a horse trough. Squirrels are unusually numerous along the spurs of the Allegheny mountains.

A King Buried Seven Hundred of His People Alive.

Superstition, Fanaticism, the Cause of the Horrid Sacrifice.

Where it Was Done—In India, In Burma.

Late despatches by way of London bring the news that 700 human beings sacrificed by King Thebuan at the Burmese capital to propitiate evil spirits were not burned to death, but were buried alive. The full depth of this horror probably will not be fathomed until English correspondents reach Mandalay, but it is now known that 700 men, boys, women, girls, priests and foreigners have been confined to the towers of the city walls. A dispatch from the London Daily News gives the following explanation of the massacre: "When a city is built in Burmah human sacrifices are offered up. A new monarch usually has a new capital. The evil spirits are irritated that there has been no change of capital, and the virtue of the old sacrifice being gone, to appease them the astrologers declared it necessary to offer up seven hundred lives. The sacrifices were made by the order of King Thebuan. This tremendous outbreak of fanaticism caused a terrible panic, not only in Mandalay, but throughout Burmah, and hundreds are seeking safety in flight. The scene of this extraordinary outrage is a country of Father India. Burmah lies just north of Siam, and is bounded on the east by China, on the west by British India, both the British and the Chinese having materially reduced the area which the Empire occupied in the days of its greatest prosperity. It is a fertile country, and especially rich in metals and gems. The inhabitants, whose number is estimated at about four millions, are Mongolians, with a monosyllabic language, a quiet, industrious and not unenlightened race, very skillful in handicrafts in carving and working in metals. Most of them profess the religion of Buddha, to which a great number of temples and pagodas are dedicated, and in connection with which there exists an elaborate monastic system, with a multitude of monks. The government of the country, as may be inferred from the recent performances, is an absolute monarchy, the ruler being called the Great King, Mindone Min, a villainous old scoundrel with half a hundred wives and more than a hundred children, who was supposed to have done a good thing for his country—which he had never been accused of doing before—when he died, some time in 1878. The exact date of his death cannot be given, from the fact that a clerical error had been issued to the effect that he never said the King was dead should have his tongue cut out, and the courtiers were naturally a little modest about making the announcement. He did die, however, and the Ministry, or whatever corresponds to a Ministry in Burmah, thought they saw an opportunity to introduce a constitutional monarchy. With this end in view they selected one of the King's younger sons, a likely young man called Thebuan, and in the King's name issued a proclamation declaring him An Shai Min, or Dweller in the Eastern House, a title equivalent to his apparent.

Thebuan was at this time about twenty years old. He is described as a tall, well-built, comely young fellow, with smooth olive complexion, a good forehead, clear, steady, bright black eyes, a well-shaped nose, a full, somewhat thin chin and a will all his own. Of his last quality the young King soon gave unmistakable proof. To begin with, the reforming Ministers who had advanced him to the throne were shut up in prison and the King formed a Ministry of his own, composed mainly of youths of his own age, who had a right royal time in the palace, which became, as it is described, the scene of orgies and debauchery. The King, recognizing, however, that he had little to show for his reign, proceeded to get rid of possible rivals by the simple plan of killing all his relatives. There were a great many of them, for his father had left thirty-seven of his wives and fifty-nine of his children living, and their massacre, a year or two ago, attracted the attention of the whole world. It was the occasion of some interesting diplomatic "representations" on the part of Great Britain. The descriptions given of this bloodthirsty performance are most revolting. At first the victims were led from their cells in twos and threes to shakho to the King; then their heads were tied to their respective pairs of ankles, and blows with a heavy club on the backs of their necks ended their misery. But this soon proved too mild a spectacle for the bloodthirsty monarch, and he gave them all the money he had in the house. At this juncture the disguise of one of the robbers, they were all masked) became disarranged, and he hastily left the house, leaving one man in charge of Mr. S. and the other with his sister. The robber with Mr. S. led him up stairs, and, striking a match, lit a candle standing upon a table in Mr. S.'s dressing room. He then gave him the thirty-five dollars, which Mr. S. said he had with all the money he had in the house. The robber was then conducted to the lower story and parted from Mr. S. in this manner: "Good bye, George, you old fraud, the next time we visit you, see that you have more stuff about you." Mr. Seldomridge has no suspicion as to who the robbers were.

STATE ITEMS. Rats stole a Berks county man's false teeth. The pine forests of Elk county swarm with rats. No effort will be made to rebuild Petroleum Centre. Tons of wild pigeons have been shipped from McKean county to New York and Philadelphia. A twelve-pound pig was caught in the Pennsylvania river, near Blairsville, recently. A ten-year-old daughter of Mr. Sylvester Crum, of Portage township, Cambria county, caught fire on Saturday a week, and was burned to death.

The clothing of Mrs. Samuel A. March, of West Chester, took fire from a stove on Tuesday a week, and she was so badly burned that she died the next day. James Johnson, a boatman, living at Peach Bottom, Lancaster county, committed suicide on Wednesday a week. He stood before a looking glass and blew his brains out.

LYNCHED. A dispatch from Petersburg, Virginia, under date of April 13, says: James Black, the negro who attempted an outrage on the person of Mrs. Hattie Ferris, near Ford's Depot, in Dinwiddie county, on the third of the present month, was taken from jail at the Dinwiddie Court-house, between nine and ten o'clock last night by an armed body of seventy-five masked men, and hanged to the gallows near the jail, the same as which Jack Plessant, the negro murderer, was executed two years ago. After completing their work the murderers left for their homes without being recognized by the jailor, who was knocked down by them before surrendering the keys to the cell in which Black was confined. This morning Black's body was swung from the gallows, and viewed by a large crowd of people. Mrs. Ferris is a northern lady, having moved from New York to Dinwiddie county some twelve months ago. When assailed she was searching for her cows, which had strayed a considerable distance from her farm. Mrs. Ferris made the best defence she could, dealing the negro sundry blows upon the head with a heavy iron boot, but it was not until her screams attracted the presence of a number of school girls that the culprit fled before accomplishing his purpose. After securing the woods two days, Black was captured by a large force of armed men, near the scene of the attempted outrage, and taken to Dinwiddie county court-house for safe-keeping. He was to have been arraigned for trial at the county court next week. Black was about twenty-five years of age, and formerly owned by Dr. D. P. Reese, of Dinwiddie county. Some two years ago he was sent to the penitentiary for burglary. The lynching was done very quietly, and completed in five minutes.

THE COATVILLE, CHESTER COUNTY, PA., TIMES OF THE 15th INST. says: On Monday night of last week, three burglars entered the residence of Geo. Seldomridge, a Dunbar farmer, who resides in Earl township, about one mile southeast of New Holland. The entrance was effected through a cellar window, and the clumsy operations of the burglars aroused the inmates of the house, consisting of Mr. Seldomridge and his sister, who hastily got their clothes and descended to the lower story. The burglars in the meantime had gained the first floor, and were about to descend above, only waited for them, and as Mr. Seldomridge and his sister stepped into the dining room, they were seized by the marauders, who presented pistols to their heads and cautioned them against raising an alarm, under penalty of death. Mr. Seldomridge took the surprise very coolly, and asked the burglars what they wanted. They informed him that they understood he had considerable money in the house, and they wanted it. They then spoke of binding and gagging Mr. Seldomridge's sister, and leaving her in the room below, while they went above for the cash. This Mr. Seldomridge persuaded them not to do, saying they could leave one of their men in charge of the woman, and he himself would give them all the money he had in the house. At this juncture the disguise of one of the robbers, they were all masked) became disarranged, and he hastily left the house, leaving one man in charge of Mr. S. and the other with his sister. The robber with Mr. S. led him up stairs, and, striking a match, lit a candle standing upon a table in Mr. S.'s dressing room. He then gave him the thirty-five dollars, which Mr. S. said he had with all the money he had in the house. The robber was then conducted to the lower story and parted from Mr. S. in this manner: "Good bye, George, you old fraud, the next time we visit you, see that you have more stuff about you." Mr. Seldomridge has no suspicion as to who the robbers were.

GENERAL ITEMS. General J. J. Bartlett's little four-year-old daughter recently traveled alone from New York to San Francisco. She carried a letter addressed to the conductors. H. F. Bennett, an organist, who has figured as a bigamist at Baltimore, Richmond, and Norfolk, was sentenced last Wednesday, at Richmond, Va., to three years in the penitentiary. James M. McIntire, a respected citizen of this county, Ill., was found dead in a field near his home, with his gun by his side and his hunting knife thrust through his throat, but an examination showed that he had been shot in the back of the head, and it is believed he was murdered by an uncle, with whom he had had trouble on account of the mule he was buying McIntire's daughter.

At the town election in Edgemoor, S. C., on Tuesday a week, an altercation occurred in which Dr. W. W. Bland and A. A. Glover were dangerously shot in the bowels, and A. C. Clisby was shot in the thigh. The quarrel grew out of the proposed reduction of the whisky tax, and occasioned a general row at the polls. A herd of 23,800 cattle are being driven from Oregon to Montana; 120 mounted men do the driving, and the outfit includes provisions, arms, and ammunition, 800 horses and forty dogs. The journey is made slowly, a day's travel not exceeding nine miles, and the speed will be lessened when the hot weather comes on, in order not to get the beasts into bad condition.

The following despatches, which were sent on Monday a week, were published to the world a few days ago, and explain themselves: ATLANTA, Ga., April 12, 1880.—Hon. Green B. Raum, Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Deputy Collector J. A. Stewart, of Fannin county, reports that a body of mounted armed men, headed by Geo. E. Rindler, visited his house on the 7th inst. at one o'clock, and burned his barn, stables and store, and fired upon him and his son, wounded the latter. He gives the names of ten of the men, and asks assistance, as he is driven from home. I have two squads of ten men out now, due tomorrow, one of which can go to Stewart's relief, if allowance is made. Stewart is one of the best and most prominent men in Fannin county. ANDREW LARK, Collector.

WASHINGTON, April 12, 1880.—Andrew Clark, Collector, Atlanta, Ga.: Dispatch received. The crimes of assault to murder and arson are not offenses against the internal revenue laws. Consequently the party of brigands who burned Deputy Collector Stewart's barn, stables and store, and fired upon his son, must be dealt with by the State laws. Warrants should at once be obtained for the arrest of the criminals, and placed in the hands of the Sheriff. Every good citizen will certainly condemn these acts, and aid in the arrest of the guilty parties. You are authorized to send your men to Stewart's aid, and render every assistance possible to the State officer in the near streets, and there from hotly distill, obtain warrants against them, and follow them vigorously from day to day until they are all arrested. Deputy Collector Stewart has my profound sympathy. Send estimate for such further allowance as you may need. GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.
