Earlier than usual, one year there came a grert snow-storm. The family were in the cottage on the mountain. They had meant to move next day to their Winter house in the valley. The snow fell until it covered the house on the mountain. There was a great wall of snow against the doors and windows. They could not get out. There was little wood to burn. The tamily felt very anxious. At last the shepherd said; "There is but on thing to do. I will push Fritz pu the chimney. I think he can get out on the roof. If he gets out he will go down to the valley. Some one will see hum. Then they will come and help us." Then hetold Fritz he must go down the valley and bring help. The dog seemed to understand.
