Republican Rally.

EVENDALE, JUNIATA CO., Pa.,

October 9, 1880.

According to a previous announcement a meeting of the Monroe Garfield and Arthur Club was held at the school house at Evend-dale. The house was called to order by the President, Mr. Wetmore, who, after a few remarks, introduced the speaker of the evening, Dr. Louis E. Atkinson, of Millintown.

His speech was an able exposition of the principles of the Republican party. While he differed in opinion with the Democratic party, yet he studiously avoided all slander and mud-slinging. In short, it was as able a discourse as it has been our privilege to listen to for a long time. He spoke substantially as follows:

Mr. President and fellow-citizens: I do not appear before you to define the candidates of the Democratic party and sling mud at them, but for the purpose of fairly and impartially discussing the political issues of the day. The caucus of the Democratic party in Congress has used its influence in framing laws for different sections of our country and such as suit the people of those sections, and which are often inimical to the well-being of the country at large.

Were the Democrats to get control of the executive department with both hands in their hands, and influenced by unprincipled men of the South, there is no telling where it would end. [Here the speaker paid a glowing tribute to the patriotic soldiers of the Democratic party who stood shoulder to shoulder with their Republican brethren in the civil war.] It is not these that we have to fear, but the vile secession sentiments of some of that party. I would most emphatically warn the Republican party to beware of the professions of reform by the party that nominated Hancock. Hancock was not the choice of the Southern leaders, but they were well aware that they could not elect a man from the South, or one who cherished Southern sentiments; so making the best out of their dilemma they chose a man who they elected, they think they can best to suit their whims. Look at the inconsistency of that party. While Hancock was fighting a war against the South, he was standing on the court house steps at home, saying,

“Not another man, man, not another dollar for the Southern war.” Had these sentiments been carried out, where would our country be today? Is such a party fit to be trusted with the reins of government?

The Democratic party is not in favor of a protective tariff, but a revenue tariff only.

The immense debt of the United States brought on by the war, and its rapid diminution under the administration of the Republican party, is sufficient proof of its ability to meet all the just demands of the people. Then why change for that party which by its gross mismanagement has so often proven its incompetency to manage the affairs of government. The Republican party say that the tariff should not be imposed on articles not produced in our own country but only on articles produced here in order to protect our laborers and prevent them from coming in competition with the pauper labor of Europe. The protective tariff gives good wages to our laborers.

Consequently our laborers dress and live better than the corresponding classes in the old country. The vast immigration of foreigners to this country is caused by the better wages laborers receive here than where they come from. Destroy our protective tariff and you will make paupers of our laborers; yet this is just what the Democratic party is doing to-day. If you read the Democratic platform you will find there a positive declaration that not a dollar shall be given out of the treasury to foster and encourage labor in the North. All those who want a revenue tariff, and whose interests are in the tariff, and whose
