The all-absorbing question of the present day among mill men segms to be, how can we run thin saws? Now, the practice of many filers is to use a beveled face, or beveled backed tooth—or both—claiming that it cuts easier and runs straighter than any other. Having learned this when young, they concientiously think that it is all so, aff as it is very difficult for most to file a square tooth, they stick to the old bevel, and will not try the square. This is their practice, and this class of men number about one half the filers. Is some sections all filers use this absurd eld-fashioned tooth, which practice has already said was wrong. We will look at this phleme tooth in a theoretical way. It is not unnleasant, is he made a careful record of temperature, pulse, respiration, etc. The conclusions arrived at are briefly as follows: Inhalation of oxygen made under phisological conditions does not cause any inconvenience. One may absorb 100 litres, and even more, daily. Oxygen increases the appetite, and develops the functions of assimilation; and on this account it tends to increase the weight of the body. It produces a slight intoxication, and tingting sensanons in the extremities. It raises the temperature very slightly. Under irs influence the respiratory movements and the pulsations becomes more numerous. Oxygen has an incontestable action on certain elements of the blood; it increases the number of red corpuscles and of hematoblasts, and the richness of the former in hemoglobin. It has no influence on the white corpuscles. M. Aune did not experience that sensation of heat in the chest of which some authors have spoken in connec porary, and that while inhalation oxygen may be of service through tavoring assimilation, it could not be made a definitive treatment, and it would be necessary always to admin-ister iron in addition.
