THE ROOTS OF THE ROSES.

The logyee are fading and falling. Flor winds are roogh and wild, the birds have caused their calling, But let me tell you my child :

Though day by day, as it closes, Doth darker and colder grow, The roots of the bright red roose Will neep alive in the snow.

And when the winter is over The boughs will get new leaves. The qual come back to the clover,

The swallow back to the caves ; The robin will wear on his bosom The vest that is bright and new And the liveliest wayside blossom Will shine with sun and dew.

So when some dear joy loses, Its beauteone summer glow, Think how the roots of the rose Are kept alive in the stow.

From the Dead.

One day Frank came home, with a look "I have 'a perfect treasure' he said, in the way of a nurse, Temple is going to take his family Europe, and when he heard what you flered to let us have their nurse, hom they will not want,"

I heard a low sigh. Flora, Frank's only ter, had been sitting in the corner of the wing-room. She rose now and slipped

"How could you, Frank ?" I said, fol lowing her with sad eyes. "I never heard your sister speak of the Temples since she lived with us; the very mention of heir name brings back the memory of "I am sorry," said Frank, "but I did ot know she was in the room. Poor
