On Sabbath evening an audience of several hundred people were present in the Methodist church to hear Rev. Mr. Ganoe preach from...

Hebrews, 9th chapter, 27th verse: "And it is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment."

The text stood out in bright letters high up on the wall of the pulpit at the head of a life-size picture of Moses on his way up Mount Nebo, where he died.

The picture represents Moses, the greatest of all men, as ascending a spur of the mountain. He is clad in a red looting-fitting robe that reaches quite to his feet; in his left hand he carries a long staff to assist him in his journey.

His right hand is thrown up to shield as it were the intense light that is beaming down from the mountain into his face and giving to his head, long white beard and hair a patriarchal appearance.

After a pleasant and instructive introductory thoughts or facts as the chief heads of the sermon:

First, that Moses left this world with a song upon his lips. The books of Moses were turned to, and songs of praise were read—songs that Moses sang to his brethren at the time all things were ready for him to take his departure for the inebriated town, where he must die.

From the happy departure of Moses, the Reverend gentleman deduced the fact that the departure for the unseen land of bliss may be the occasion for song and praise singing. Since the time of Moses, it is a matter of record that people have died amidst the songs of praise.

The mother of John Wesley expressed a desire that at the hour of her death her family should assemble around her and sing. Her son, Charles Wesley, composed a song or hymn, especially for the occasion of the death of his mother, and when her spirit was about to wing its way into the unknown world, the family assembled around her bed and sang the song.

Upon its conclusion she said, "Good night, children, I will meet you in the glorious morning." Mr. Ganoe read the hymn that had been composed for the occasion of the death of Mrs. Wesley. Lydia Baxter, also, when she lay on her death-bed, requested that a particular hymn be sung about the time of the dissolution of soul and body.

Mr. Ganoe also read the hymn that was sung at the death-bed of Lydia Baxter.

Second, that Moses left this world before his life-work was finished. There was a barrier of one sin that prevented the accomplishment of his work. How many others never finish the life-work? When the child lies the name of its departed mother, and calls upon its father to write to mother in heaven, there seems to be a life-work not finished.

When a child is suddenly called away into the unseen world, it seems to be a life-work not finished. When the student is taken away from his earnest pursuits there seems to be a life-work not finished. There may be one sin in the way, but we should follow in the footsteps of Moses, relying on the promises and commands of God, to remove the sin and give rest in the promised land.

THE FEDERAL (M.D.) TIMES relates the following story of the application in lieu of that city: "In connection with this insurance case another amusing story is told. It is as follows: An old man of about 90 years, living in the suburbs of the city, supposed to be likely to die at any moment, was insured by a citizen for $3,000. The man being old and decrepit, poor and forlorn, having asked the holder of the policy on his life for assistance, was given a cheap suit of clothes and was told to wash up a little. He took his clothes, went home, scrubbed up, and later made his appearance with pride beaming from his countenance before his noble benefactor, looking as fresh as a daisy. The policy-holder was thunder-struck at the old man's youthful appearance. When he recovered from the shock, he excitedly called his wife. On her arrival upon the scene he pointed in horror at his subject and bawled out, "Look at that man! Why, great heavens! he looks ten years younger than he ever did, and we've paid $35 assessment on him during the past week, too!" The old man whimpered: "Why, Mr. Blank, you don't want me to die, do you?" "Don't want you to die!" frantically yelled his benefactor, "what in the name of Jerusalem did I have you insured for?"

The insurance Companies in operation in Selma, Snyder county, pay out every month to employees in the town about one thousand dollars, and that is again distributed by purchasers—and so forth—in the business of the place.

The Snyder county Tribune says: "One of the good results springing from speculative life insurance is the fact that a number of persons who have been spending their money for liquor are now saving their money to pay assessments."

LOVE'S DELIRIUM. Over the goblet filled to the brim She sends a bewildering glance at him. Over the sea of pink foam which she sees in the light of her beauty divine. Deeper and deeper she drowns and dips In the rose-tinted wine her head and lips. While over the glass she sarily laughs A pledge which he eagerly catches and quaffs. And he drinks in a madness wilder than wine Through her smile and her eyes bewildering shine.

He drinks in delirium, danger and death, As over the goblet comes floating her breath. As over the flagon of rose-colored bliss She wickedly, wittingly waits him a kiss. Then laughing a laugh derisively sweet, She goes, while he kneels in despair at her feet.

Arkansas and Texas.—The season is cold and late. Peaches are a failure. Early corn was injured by excessive rains, and there is a reduced acreage of cotton. In Virginia.—The peaches are killed, and the late wet weather is unfavorable to the other crops.

The Philadelphia Record last Saturday published the following: Reports of grain at the seaboard show a marked decrease during the four months ending to-day as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The net decrease at this port is about 50 per cent. In combined receipts of wheat and corn, but the arrivals of the former are slightly in excess of last year to some extent. Official figures are not at hand for a late comparison of arrivals at Baltimore and New York, but the decline has been important. The severe winter is largely responsible for the adverse showing at all ports.
