A midnight storm at Lewistown,

A tornado visited Delaware county.

In New Hampshire a storm struck the village of Franklin some days ago. Hail stones, many of them more than an inch in diameter, fell in great numbers and spread ruin everywhere. Half the houses in the place had their windows shattered, multitudes of chimneys were swent down. trees unrouted and cardens every where ruined. The damage was confined chiefly to the town and and the valley for a mile or two on each side. The path of the tornado was about two miles wide.

In West Rockingham county, Va., during a storm, recently, hall fell to the depth of six inches, the stones being of unusual size and remaining on the ground for twenty-four hours. In the region of Port Republic the circuit of the tornado was a mile and a half wide and five miles long, overturning houses in its track, and literally destroying whole fields of wheat and corn.
