In several districts additional land was purchased to enlarge play-grounds-a very wise step. It happens occasionally that the proper amount of land cannot be obtained peaceably. Where a man lacks the true spirit for public improvement, directors should not hesitate to pursue the course that the law provides, and thus perform a duty to themselves and posterity. In the improvement of school grounds our progress is slow. In thriving communities school lots are commonly fenced in, or out rather, the sides to the public roads being left open. The number of lots properly fenced in is limited to eight or nine. Shade trees have been set out, but maliciously inclined persons are destroying them. The law ought to be enforced the same as would be done if they were the property of a pri-
