to the power of mending or avoiding them. We do not mean mending them in the character and work of others, but in ourselves and our complished at a portage, over and through the stones of which the water dashed with hundred and twenty thousand baskets. in ourselves and our own doings. Most expert finders of fault know how to de-claim against them and expose the claim against them and expose the weakness or worthlessness from which they spring. To "find fault" and to "socid" are almost parts of the same or not, as she pleased. It is astomshing that was born with but two legs, and it was left.

Sharp stomachs mak' short graces

Bend the back to the burden

There was ne'er enouch whar much
