

The Ohio election will take place October 10.

Born, General Wolsley, and Arbi Bey, are quite sick.

The late State Fair, it is said did not pay expenses by over $4,000.

Miss Foster, of Philadelphia, has taken the stump, for woman suffrage in Nebraska.

It is looking out that the larger percentage of the preachers in Pennsylvania are Independents.

The English say that Isaiah predicted the destruction of Alexandria. The English are conceded enough to say almost anything in favor of themselves. Isaiah lived along time before Alexandria was built.

Extraneous shocks, last Wednesday frightened the people of St. Louis; who knows that the plains of the West are not to be heaved into mountains and hills like the face of the country in Pennsylvania?

In Ohio the Republicans earnestly renege the prohibition side of the liquor question, while the Democrats are as silent as an oyster on that question. The result of the campaign is awaited with great interest by the whole country.

The Democratic machine in York State had their candidate for Governor ready quite a while before the convention that nominated him, met. His life was ready, and his picture was ready for distribution, the moment the nomination was made. Grover Cleveland is his name.

The prehistoric foot prints in rocks at Carson, Nevada are interesting. Scientists almost as much as the new political foot prints in Pennsylvania are interesting the old back politician, and the man that is nearly all the time before the people for an office.

There was a large Beaver Republican meeting held in Philadelphia on Saturday evening. Congressman Kelly made a speech, his subject was the tariff, and the past action of the Democracy on that question, and the probable action of that party on the question in the future. General Beaver delivered a speech: his subject was the people.

John G. Whittier, does not understand that a military parade in Philadelphia as a part of the Penn. Bicentennial celebration. Penn. he says did not believe in the sword. His methods were peaceful arbitration. Whittier might be interviewed for his opinion as to what Penn would have done with a case like the Southern Rebellion, had he been called to deal with it.

It is alleged that Folger, the New York Republican candidate for Governor was nominated by a trick. It is said that a delegate who was not a Folger man could not attend the convention. The Folger men found that out, and forged a despatch from him substituting a delegate for Folger, and the vote of the bogus delegate, secured the nomination of Folger. Many Republicans are asking for a new State Convention.

The Youngmen's Fire Insurance Company is winding up its business with a vigor down in Lancaster, which may be learned by the following from a Lancaster paper. 103 executions have been issued in Lancaster at the instance of John A. Beeber, receiver of the Youngmen's Fire Insurance Company, against policy holders in that county, who refused to pay their assessments. The executions are in the hands of the Sheriff, who will proceed to collect the amounts due at once by levy and sale.

The North American of last Thursday has this to say on the proposition of the Catholics on the temperance question. It was rather a bold thing of the Roman Catholics in session at Milwaukee to come squarely out in opposition to the prohibition movement, and they deserve the credit which belongs to those who have the courage of their opinions. There is, moreover, much that is reasonable in their argument, that legislation of this character is an infringement upon personal liberty, and is calculated to have a prejudicial influence upon the public morals. They can be better afforded to take up this attitude because the Catholic clergy have always been zealous and energetic in the cause of temperance, and because temperance is a virtue which is more generally practiced in Roman Catholic than in Protestant countries.

Jay Humeau, has been so much commended for the assessments made for this campaign, that last week one day to a New York newspaper man he spoke as follows on the subject: "The hue and cry that had been raised about this business was senseless and unjust. Two years ago, during the Garfield campaign, I was really excited even to the extent of levying an additional assessment. No fault was then found with me, but on the contrary, I was set down as a smart fellow, a true Republican, a patriot. Now, however, there has gone up a shout against the system, but it has availed nothing. Consider that this is an off year, we have collected much more than in 1879, the last of year. The fact is that I have not received a cent of the money, except from Congressmen. The Independents or Stewart Republicans have nominated a candidate for Congress in Northumberland county.

The Tariff Commission ran against a Free Trade Governor in Missouri, and the Governor told the Commission that he is backed by 12,000,000 free trade farmers.

When the rebellion was going on Congress divided Virginia, and made two States. The division cut down the revenues of the old State government, and repeated efforts have been made to induce the new state, that is West Virginia to agree to pay a part of the debt that the new state should pay. His proposal has awakened a general interest in the question.

COMMUNICATION

FROM MAIN STREET, Mifflintown Sept. 29, 1882.

After many days of damp and rain, the lowering clouds lifted, and the sun came out to cheer the heart of the committee that had worked up the case of the soldiers' reunion for last Thursday.

Up to the morning of that day so unpropitious had been the weather that the business men of the town had not the heart to turn a hand towards the esthetic art of decoration. The old soldiers themselves, though the reunion had been washed out, were glad to supply the everyday necessities that they formerly so beautifully provided for decoration purposes.

Then again the soldiers, this time, were not as thick as two bugs in a rug, for between the Veteran Association, and the Post existed some sort of a difference which I do not understand. That is I do not understand the question well enough to split hairs over it, and even if I did understand the question well enough to split a hair over it, it is not the business of Main Street to do it here.

The Post claims, and it was published, that it had been invited to participate in the reunion ceremonies of the 28th ult.

While it was not published who had invited them, it was understood by the knowing ones that it was the Veteran Association, which indeed is the body to whom belongs the management of the reunion business.

The Post went on in the invitation it said, somewhat like Eoan's monkey did when he got hold of the cat's cheese.

It is a pity, that the little rag took place. It is hoped that it will all be worked out soon.

But still with all the unfavorable weather, and the slight friction between the Veteran Association, and the Post, when the clouds began to break on Thursday forenoon, the prospect brightened, and when the crowd came to town everything passed off pleasantly.

The Post turned out in uniform, and was headed by the handsomely dressed Port Royal band, but nothing could induce it to form in procession in the street. The band scared them, and their timidity, and dainty regard for blackened shoes, stands out in contrast with the brave soldier like marching of the McAllisterville band when it came to town. They took the middle of the street, and blackened shoes and mud were the things that they had the least regard for.

I am not declaring against the ex-quisites, but the fact remains that Pompey lost the mastery of the world because he had too many ex-quisites in his army. Everybody praised the McAllisterville band for their appreciation of the fitness of things. Their music was good, and they marched like veterans.

The Mifflintown band was not out for the day ceremony, because the private business of a number of the membership would not allow them to lose the day.

Most of the visitors were from the East side of the river.

When the sun came out about noon, the crowd thickened into a dense mass on the pavements at certain points about Court House square. It was a first rate place for the heat to squeeze the hand of his sweet heart and even the casual observer could not fail to notice how courtship was carried on while the Post, and the Orphans were on dress parade. It is not every day that lovers can be so circumstanced as to court with a soldier's pageant flashing before their eyes, and the music of the brass bands pealing in their ears.

It is a pity that the two chief speakers for the occasion had each been a candidate for the judgeship of the respective district in which they live. A. J. Patterson was the first speaker, after noon. Last year he was a candidate before the district conference for the President judgeship and had received the nomination he would now be the Judge for the counties of Juniata and Perry. It is said by a number of people that Patterson believed that Judge Junkin would win the contest and for that reason he was shy of accepting a nomination. If he could have foreseen how unfortunate Judge Junkin was in having men to champion him that every time they opened their mouth in his favor they drove other men away from his support he doubtless would have been more anxious for the nomination.

J. Merrill Linn, was the second speaker. He is from Lewisburg Union county. He had reached a step beyond that of Patterson, in the direction of the judgeship in the district composed of the counties of Union, Snyder, and Mifflin. He had received the district nomination but was defeated by Bucher, by 1,200 majority.

The ceremonies in the evening were conducted in the Court House in the presence of a noisy crowd. It was well high on to 11 o'clock when the meeting adjourned. It was a pleasant day for many but for others it doubtless is a source of remorse. The number of young drunken men was uncommonly large. Some young men began a career that will bring them to a miserable end. At least 20 persons so misbehaved themselves in public as to merit a "chuck" into jail. However, the oldest native born citizens say that for hard fighting, the re-unions of to day do not compare with the rough and tumble fights that took place on militia muster days, and on the 4th of July during the time of celebration, in past days.

The reminiscence of old citizens, of the strategic efforts that took place between the un-uniformed militia, and a uniformed company in this place for the possession of a canon that had done service in the war of 1776, and 1712, is quite as interesting a peaceful narrative as any of more recent occurrence that may be told. The respective parties would steal the canon, the one from the other. One night, to forever settle the dispute, the canon was hidden away. One version of it was dropped into Cotter's hole in the river; another version of the case is that it
