NO. 6.

A GOLDEN WEDDING There is a time beneath New England skies When the late autumn, as if joth to go, Lingers along the hills with sunlit eyes, And outstretched hands over the vales below. A golden baze floats round her like a mist, The air is soft and buling where she strays, And lo? as her last, richest parting gift,

She brings the glorious Indian summer days, So in these lives of ours there comes a time, After long strife with care, and self and sin, When the soul rises by a power sublime, And to God's rest and sunshine enters in; Where caim and quiet, and the peace of God, And love divine, after long, patient years, or jubilant upon the radiant brow,

And life has no more place for griefs or fears. To these, love-crowned by fifty happy years, Their golden wedding brings still rarer gifts Than blessed the glad, bright days of long ago,

For now God's smile their souls to beaven u And in life's blassful Indian summer time, So rich in heartfelt joy, they can await, With reverent trust, their Heavenly Pather's will,

NOT VERY ANGRY.

Grandma Harris was wrapping up the delicious golden balls of her own make of butter in fragrant snowy linen cloths, and mentally calculating what the butter and cottage cream, and the four pair of fat chickens, and the halfdozen pumpkins, and the four barrels of apples ought to bring in the market when grand-father went to town in the big wagon the next day.

And just as she had about decided that, with good luck, they ought to be able to buy the piano for Bessie by Christmas, there came a step alongside, and she looked up, to see Frank Merrivale, tall, handsome, with his fall overcoat wearing a rosebud and a spray of boyardia and his soft felt hat pushed off his forehead. "Oh, it's you, is it, Frank?" grandma Harris said, patting a butter-ball lov-ingly as she laid it beside a dozen others in the long shallow basket. "It is f, grandma. "What are you doing?

And then after a few minutes he went away, and grandma took off her spectacles and wiped the tears from her dear old eyes-tor Frank was the apple of her eye, and his happiness or misery delighted or wounded ner to the very core of her motherly heart.

And so when Lulu Carroll came down from her own room into the sunny easy sttting-room about three o'clock that same afternoon she found her mother and Mrs. Harris enjoying a most comfortable chat over their bright knitting-

She was such a pretty girl, slender and graceful, with big brown eyes and wavy golden-brown hair. Grandma didn't wonder a bit that

Frank cared so much for her, "Oh, it's Mrs. Harris," she said laugh-
