brother? Writers and novelists of all ages have accused this ubiqunous quad ruped of treachery, stealthiness and ferocity, until children, who take their impressions from books and not from experience, have come to regard him as the incarnation of that is mean, bloodthirsty, tricky, and dangerous, "Truth compels me, however," says Lieutenant ionel Richard Irving Dodge, of the and strength he is the most harmless to beast and the least dangerous to man. He will not even attack when wounded; and though he will snap at pursuing dogs in self-defense, he never follows up the advantage given him by his sharp teeth and powerful jaws, but takes to fight as fart as he can." These words, written about the buffalo woif of the American plains, tall, gaunt, lean and hungry looking, may with equal troth be applied to his congener in Brittany and Poiton. In the former province wolves are rarely seen, although they commit terrible noctarnal depredations among sheep, calves and dogs. Such, however, is their cowardice, that every Breton farmer is in the habit of sending his flock of sheep out to pasturage dur ing the day with a little child, often a girl not more than 6 or 7 years of age, in charge of them, and nothing is more uncommon than for the hungry marauder, who lies licking his chops on the edge of the adjoining thicket, to issue forth from his fastness and peunce upon a sheep so long as the intantile representative of the lord of creation is close at hand. At night, however, the woll is bolder, and will scale walls and scratch his way through the thatched roof of the sheepfold to get at his prey, Strange as it may seem, the dog-es-pecially if he be of the smooth-haired breed, like the pointer or fox terrierhas more attractions for the "caus lupus," whose relative or descendant he is generally believed to be, than the wooily sheep. "When a wolf is hungry." writes an English gentleman who has long resided in Brittany, "and smells an appetizing dog, he will spring upon October. him and carry him off, even under the nose of his master. It is certain, in fact, that the wolf prefers a dog to any other prey. When I was at Hue goes three years since a wolf jumped over the wall of the hotel yard and carried off a dog whose pitcous howls awoke the entire village. An empty collar, suspended at the end of the chain, and covered with blood, bore testimony to the untimely fate of its late wearer."
