Williamsport.

Of the one hundred cities within the limits of the Republic, that have a population of 20,000, Williamsport, Pa., equals the best and the most beautiful place, on a level piece of ground, on the North side of the West Branch of the Susquehanna river. Its borough limits extend along the river a distance of seven miles, and back from the stream one mile and a half. It is long since off at the swaddling clothes of the village, so that now the festival on the river is almost every country town. It has not the freedom of the city, but it has the freedom of the country. Many of the lots of the finer residences are without a fence, and the buildings stand in plots of green grass, dotted with trees and flowers.

In point of age
it is five years younger than Milliflinton. It was laid out in 1796. In a newspaper article of a column or two, the difference in the material prosperity and appearance of the two places cannot be told. While our town is a fresh and youthful place, it is not fresher looking than Williamsport. Everything looks new and bright here, and so recent in appearance that it is only in the business part of the town that the houses are built, one against the other.

The sixteenth and seventeenth months of June could make the money market in Williamsport. In the evening, the families of most of the residences, were to be seen on the porches, and on the green in front of the houses, very many of which stand 30 to 50 feet away from the street. Even the people look young, and not many men and women appear like grand parents.

of the place should be good, for 40 preachers "break the bread of spiritual life" in many churches every Sunday, to large congregations, which is a preacher for every 500 people.

in this town, in higher state of prosperity, which is evidenced by the fact that we have a preacher for every 400 people. Williamsport should have 20 churches to be up to the religious standard of Milliflinton.

They have a larger population, more business, greater wealth, more costly style, but less religion, and all this beautiful young city was cut out of the woods.

in the properties of the head waters, and tributaries of the stream named above. If Milliflinton had a forest of pine along the Juniata west of it, perhaps to world be a city of 20,000 people. The first saw mill was built at Williamsport in 1838. That was the beginning. The last saw mill will cease to work 25 years hence, when the pine and hemlock will have been all cut away.

By that time the place expects to have other industrial establishments established to make up for the loss of the lumber trade. It has two gum factories, that employ 75 or 80 girls, five large furniture factories that employ nearly hundred men, several machine shops, and other manufacturing, and four railroads, so that the citizens are convinced that their prosperity is to continue, and that they are indeed out of the woods. It was the woods that created the GREAT BOOM.

of Williamsport. A man named J. H. Perkins came to the town from Maine, in 1845, and under a charter obtained from the Legislature built the boom that concentrated lumber here, that has kept 40 old saw mills running the past 10 years. Perkins is still living, and his boom was the means upon which Williamsport grew and flourished till it has more wealth accumulated than any other town of the counties, than all the wealth of Juniata. It is the paradise of the middle men, the lumber is stopped here as it comes from the woods and saved for other dealers. The homes of the middle men are strong along 4th and 5th streets, while south of them, fringing the river, are the mills from whence comes the lumber. The wooden lives in the cabin, remote from the marts of trade and gets the pittance that nearly always falls to the lot of first producer while the middle men by a concentration of capital receive large returns, but it is a question, undetermined which of the two classes get the most of the enjoyment of life.

The boom employed not only Williamsport to wealth by stopping the lumber here and increasing its cost to the consumer by levying a tax on it, and by saving it into boards and so forth, but it was the thing over which there was great scandal in the Legislature of the Common wealth. It is only a few years since that the boom men had the whole State in an uproar over the efforts to limit members of the Legislature pro and con. Without the boom Williamsport would be a place of less importance than it is. The water for the town is brought from the mountain beyond the river in pipes that are laid on the bottom of the stream so deep that the boom logs never affect them.

Two SEVENHUNDRED REIDERS span the river, for the passage of which one must pay toll, which suggests the thought, if a city as rich as this, and a county as rich as Lycoming county is, will not free the river bridges, by causing the taxpayers to pay for them, why should such poor counties—comparatively speaking—be nearly to death to free river bridges over which the poorest man of the people of the county crosses?

COURT AND COMMENCEMENT.

There are many strangers in Williamsport, at this writing, June 17, attending the United States Court, of the Western District of Pennsylvania. There are present from Juniata, H. S. Scholl, Robert Nixon, Elder Gilliford, and the writer. The court house does not present as handsome an appearance outside as does the one in our town. Up to this writing Judge Acheson has presided over all the courts that have been held. He reminds me very much of Ex-Senator John J. Patterson, of South Carolina, his facial expression is much like the Colonel's, and his gesticulations are as like his as if made by himself. The Judge talks little, and keeps a break on the lawyers so that their tongues are not let out too loosely against each other, he is a hard worker when a case requires it. Marshal Ratan is an efficient officer and his assistant, Bentley, has the business of the office thoroughly systematized. Clerk of the Court, McCandless, conducts business like a veteran in the course of proceedings in a S. C. Court. George Wilson, Assistant District Attorney, is able and expeditious in the discharge of business. There are many strangers in town, in attendance upon the exercises of commencement days at Dickinson Seminary, an institution of learning under the auspices of the Methodist church. It seems to be the ambition of every one here to build a home back from the street and without connection with neighbor houses, and to cultivate a yard of green grass, and shade trees. It is beautifully peculiar in that way, and as I contrast it with other cities, they seem common place and unattractive and I wonder what my impression will be.

WHEN I GET BACK to Milliflinton, where the houses are all built out to the pavement and where trees and grass plots and yards are not at a premium, as they are here. It will not be like that of Emory McCahan, who once told me of impressions that he received in the city of a recently deceased man, who had been severely wounded in a fiercely contested battle, and swooned. He believes that while in that state of unconsciousness, his soul went to heaven, for it was in a place more beautiful than he had ever dreamed or imagined, and all his friends were around him, and great multitudes of people were about on all sides. Suddenly he was restored to consciousness, and the roar of battle and the agonizing cries of the wounded caused him to feel as if he had awakened in hell, and he wished that he had never come back to earth. Long may he live to enjoy the lumber trade in Shade mountain. If I could I would have him strike a boom like Perkins did at Williamsport. I cannot have a feeling of regret when I get back from this beautiful place to my native plain town, for aside from the wealth and exterior, and the grandeur of houses and grounds, one place is not behind. There are no landmarks here that in Milliflinton, and no better. The children are no prettier. I heard a little girl, as she passed a colored water of the hotel at which I am stopping, ask him: "Have you children in there?" It was an ugly insinuation that the man had visited a hen rook at night, and the colored man took it in that way. Would a Milliflinton girl be so insulting? The editors here write no better, and fight with their pens as often over unworthy candidates as we do. The lawyers are no nobler, and use as rough course out upon each other as the Milliflinton bar. Its store keepers are no more clever and have no larger stores. The doctors have no better pills to give, and its preachers preach the same theology, excepting that of the Catholic system of the Jewish synagogue, and men and women court, and love each other no more ardently, and with no more fidelity than people are in Juniata, and the people generally are not better than our people. We should love and cultivate the beautiful, certainly, but this world is not all show, and the struggle for bread and butter, at Williamsport, goes on as vigorously as at other places.

The driver was scattered a strolling on a bag pipe, fighting a triangle, and blowing letters on Main street. Music had no charms for a frightened horse.
