Canada is getting so full of runaway bank thieves, that almost every man that goes over from the states is suspected of being a runaway. The latest addition to the ranks of the bank thieves, is R. S. Scott, of New York city, paying hotel of Manhattan Bank. He stole $100,000 of the bank funds. This time the rascal is not a member of a church, or a Sunday school teacher. Large as the sum is, that Scott stole, the bank is not broken.

Married life among the Romans was held to be a sacred contract, and in the early days of the government there were no divorces granted during a period of over five hundred years. The divorce period came, and divorced people could count discredited husbands and wives by the score. A generation ago, divorces in America were few, now in the chief city of this commonwealth, every fifteenth couple that are married are divorced. Where are the American people drifting to? Who, and what organization is to stop this fearful tide that has set in?

Murdered by Chicken Thieves.

Under date of the 1st of June, the Philadelphia Times publishes the following despatch from Chambersburg, Pa.: This morning about two o'clock John S. Hollinger, a young farmer of twenty three, residing with his father at Hopewell Mills, three miles from Waynesboro, this county, was awakened by the barking of the dogs in the yard. The young man looked out of the window and in the dim light saw the forms of three men in the barn yard near the chicken coop. Mr. Hollinger aroused the other members of the household and while they were dressing he armed himself with a pistol and went to the barn. He had hardly left the house when his father heard six or seven shots fired in quick succession. Accompanied by the hired man, he hurried to the barn. They found young Hollinger lying on his back on the ground, with a gaping wound in his left side, out of which the last throbs of his heart sent a gushing stream of blood. He never spoke after being shot. Two chambers were empty in the dead man's revolver. The authorities were at once notified, and a dispatch announcing the murder was sent to Sheriff Kurtz, asking that a posse be sent to assist in apprehending the murderers. Squire A. B. Stoler, of Waynesboro, held an inquest after an autopsy on the remains had been made by Dr. I. W. Sively, of the same place. The thieves were tracked into the mountains to a place where three families reside, members of which have all served terms of imprisonment for chicken stealing before. None of the male members of the families were about, but the mountains are being diligently searched by farmers and towns people. Daniel Hollinger, the father of the murdered man, is one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of this county. He is almost wild with grief and has offered a large reward for the apprehension of the slayers of his son. The Commissioners of Franklin county this afternoon offered a reward of five hundred dollars.

ITEMS.

Eighteen bodies have been consumed in the Lancaster crematory since it was built.

Young chicks come into the world with the yolk of an egg stored away for their immediate nourishment, and therefore they need no feed for twelve to twenty-four hours.

A Kansas flock master sheared six hundred fine merino sheep, trusting the fine sunshiny weather as the beginning of summer. That night came a cold rain, and in the morning two hundred sheep, living and shivering, stood among the carcasses of four hundred that had perished.

What Will Surely Do It.

One's hair begins to fall out from many causes. The important question is: What is sure to make it grow again? According to the testimony of thousands, Parker's Hair Balsam will do it. It quickly covers bald spots, restores the original color when the hair is gray or faded, eradicates dandruff, and causes the scalp to feel cool and well. It is not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed, safe. Never disappoints those who require a nice, reliable dressing.

Crossing Wheat and Rye.

New York, June 4.—The Rural New Yorker two years ago produced a hybrid between wheat and rye, the new grain being very distinct from either. Last year a further cross was effected upon these hybrids by using the pollen of rye, so that the resulting grain is three quarters rye. The plants are remarkable vigorous, and the heads large and still very distinct from those of rye whatever may prove to be the economic value of these hybrids, the facts are most interesting scientifically.

Another Veto.

On the evening of the 3rd inst., the Legislature received from the Governor a message restoring the bill allowing courts to fix the compensation of sheriffs for boarding prisoners at the maximum sum of fifty cents a day for each. The Governor considers the rate fixed exorbitant and calls attention to the fact that Chester pays less than nine cents a day, Montgomery nineteen cents, Philadelphia twenty and Lehigh fourteen and one-half. A few of the counties pay as high as fifty cents and two more than that sum. By far the larger number, however, pay twenty-five cents or under. He refers to the fact that at the last state encampment of the militia the cost of maintaining the men was only seventeen cents a day. If soldiers could be kept for this sum, why should prisoners cost fifty cents?

How the Fijis Live.

A traveler recently returned from the Fiji Islands, and who brought with him the skull and bones of a missionary friend as curious, declares that the Fijians would again become cannibals if they had the opportunity. Even now, he says, one cannot go to the interior of the island with safety. The Government forbids people to go into the mountains for fear they will get killed and eaten. All the clothes the natives wear is a loin cloth, and the Government encourages the chiefs in not introducing civilized clothing. The women though have some modesty, as is shown by the fact that only recently eight of them were sentenced by the Roko, for some offense, to go nude for four months. There is very little education among the masses, but the missionaries have established a few schools for children.

The Hessian Fly.

TOPEKA, Kan., June 3.—There is now no doubt but that the Hessian Fly is doing as much damage, if not more, than did the cold weather last winter, and the surplus wheat of Kansas will dwindle down to small proportions. Fields that four weeks ago promised one-half to three-quarters of a crop are ruined, and will be turned over and milled put in. The fly is not confined to any one section, and if observable more in one place than another, that place is within the great wheat district, where there is more wheat for the insect to thrive on. Before the ravages of the insect became so widespread, some conception of the wheat crop could be formed; now no one can form any estimation and all guesses are wild ones. In the great wheat valley of Kansas—the Gypsum, in Saline county—where wheat never fails, entire fields are being plowed and millet sown. This is repeated in all parts of the State.

Horrible Murder in Italy.

The Philadelphia Bulletin published the following despatch from the city of Rome, Italy, under date of May 18, 1885. A shocking murder by two butchers, in a town a few miles distant from Rome, has aroused the whole populace, and judges ed the whole advocates to-day. The victim was a young man named Domenico Poggi, nineteen years of age, likely, good humored fellow, and a general favorite in the village of Monterotondo, where he lived. On Thursday last he disappeared, so suddenly and completely as to make it impossible for his family and friends even to conjecture what had become of him. A day or two passed, when one morning at daybreak, a shepherd comes before the Brigadier of Carabinieri, and says tremblingly that there is a murdered man in a copse "down yonder." His attention had been drawn to the place by his dog, whom he could not get to leave the spot, after he had rushed howling into the thicket. No time was lost in repairing to the spot. Diggers were set to work and the rest of the body was soon discovered. The by-standers recoiled in horror. The head itself was split clean in two, and the two halves had to be put together before the unfortunate Domenico (for it was he) could be recognized. The head was severed from the trunk, as likewise were the arms and legs, and the body itself had also been scientifically divided, and a portion of the corpse removed. Then suddenly suspicion fell upon two men named Antonio and Filippo Tozzi, father and son, who were butchers by trade. Domenico had paid court to a daughter of Tozzi, and that the son had been heard to say he would kill him rather than let him marry his sister. And this indeed seems to have been the sole motive for the heinous and dastardly crime. The Tozzis, who had been as forward as all their neighbors in the search after young Poggi, and had expressed equal surprise at his disappearance, were arrested. At first they denied everything, but soon the son began to criminate the father, and the father the son, and at last they made a full confession. In the evening of the day on which poor Domenico disappeared, Antonio Tozzi, then apparently quite friendly, asked young Poggi to go down with him to a kind of cellar under the shop to look at some meat they had just prepared. This cellar or cave served as a slaughter place for lambs and kids, and all the apparatus of the trade was kept there. The elder Tozzi only remained behind a moment to close the shop and then followed down stairs. He arrived just as Antonio had killed his unsuspecting victim by a blow from behind, and the elder man at once sprang forward and dragged the head backward by the hair, holding it in a convenient position while his son cut the throat across. They then placed the body over a large tub until all the blood had drained away, after which they proceeded to cut it up as coolly and methodically as if it had been the carcass of a sheep. Their first idea was to burn it afterwards, and indeed they began with one of the feet, but were afraid of being betrayed by the smell of burning flesh. They therefore liddled the various parts of the body into other tubs until night had quite fallen, and then loaded them upon their cart and started for the Campagna, the son driving the mule and the father following the cart on foot. Having buried the mutilated remains and burned every vestige of their victim's clothing they now thought themselves quite secure, and, as I have said, expressed surprise at Domenico's disappearance, and pretended to join in the search for him. There is one other hideous detail almost too terrible to relate, but that is really the keynote of the tremendous popular indignation which has been aroused against the murderers. It is supposed that they sold the liver and other portions of the intestines cut up with those of animals in the shop, and it is known that they sold the blood mixed up with that of lambs. The wife of the elder Tozzi was cognizant of the whole affair, and coolly washed down the cellar where the scene of the butchery had taken place. The only member of the family worthy of the least compassion seems to be the girl, who knew nothing of the villainy which was being enacted, and, in addition to the horror caused by these revelations, weeps bitterly for her murdered sweetheart, of whom she was very fond.
