JOHN B. GOSCH died last Thursday afternoon, in Philadelphia, after a brief illness, from the effects of a stroke of apoplexy, which he received while delivering a lecture on the evening of the previous Monday. He came to this country from England when 12 years of age. He learned the book binding trade, he farmed, took to drink, became a drunkard, reformed, turned lecturer, and was considered one of the foremost orators in the land. He was born in 1814.

It is reported that a party of twenty odd New York men have been enlisted on the pay of thirty dollars a month and board, to go to Honduras and engage with General Soto in the enterprise of unseating President Bogran and placing General Soto in his place. When the General is placed in power, the New Yorkers expect to become the nobles of the land by the right of power, they expect to be the Lords and so forth. By and by the expedition will be heard from, perhaps as prisoners of the Bogran authority.

There is an establishment at Birmingham, England, that manufactures thousands of wooden gods—idols—for the inhabitants of India, that Great Britain rules. The British are so kindly disposed to their religious subjects of India, that they will sell them a Bible or a painted wooden God just as they desire to have. Latterly a good deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed with the quality of the God that the British have been sending them. The natives complain that the British Gods are made out of cross grained, knotty wood, and are painted with cheap mineral paint, which in hot weather comes off when the devotees kiss them. The Hindoo is very patient, but it does rile him when the paint of a high priced god sticks to his lips.

GENERAL SHERMAN has come to the front in denunciation of the newspapers for making so many misstatements. The newspapers do publish many things that should be left unpublished, but it is not that which is the cause of the General's wrath. It is his own misstatement. He had written a letter to a friend, that a certain General had lived, that General Grant could not have risen to the chief command of the armies of the Republic, he did not thus write of Grant in the spirit of unkindness. The friend to whom he wrote published what he said about Grant. When Sherman saw the statement he denied it. His friend produced the letter, and that settled the question. The General has his own forgetfulness and the ambition of his friend to appear in print to blame for showing up his views of how the death of General Smith changed the destiny of Grant, and how his own letter in regard to the question between himself and friend proved that his friend was correct in his statement.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

J. H. Womlesder, a farmer of Juniata township, Huntingdon county, was recently attacked by a catamount and terribly injured.

A newspaper of Beloit, Kansas, says that in Clark county during a recent snow storm a large flock of sheep crowded close together and the snow melting then freezing fastened the entire flock together.

John Ahren, convicted in the courts of Lackawanna county of bigamy, died suddenly while being conveyed to another convict. Miss Mahony, whom he last married in Scranton, is believed to be on her deathbed.

Judge Yates, of Peoria Ill., squandered as trustee $1,500,000 for the time of a wife at that place, and then absconded, deserting his wife and child. It is now learned that he ruined a young lady in Peoria, and that she followed him to Montreal, where both were lately seen.

The body of Mrs. Sarah Wilkerson, a widow, aged 47 years, was found in a well over her premises, near Belleville, Ill. She was suspected of complicity in the murder of a young man named Massey, who boarded with her, and is supposed to have committed suicide, through "fear of the grand jury."

A young Indian named Red Eagle, on his way home from the Indian Training School at Carlisle, Pa., to his home at the Pine Ridge Agency, Dak., died at the Northwestern Railway Station, Chicago, on the 17th inst., of consumption. He was accompanied by nine other Indians, also on their way home from school.

The Track of a Storm.

An English meteorologist has traced the career of the Manila typhoon of September, 1882, and found that it crossed the Pacific Ocean, America and the Atlantic Ocean, and arrived in the Baltic in the following November, making a journey of 14,000 miles in thirty six days.

A Needle Cushion.

A young lady's pin cushion in Kittanning, Pa., is thus spoken of in the Philadelphia Times of the 11th inst: Miss Josephine Weaver, of this place yesterday had five pieces of cambric needles removed from the lower part of her left leg by Dr. Jessup. She is known as the living needle cushion and during the past six years, it is said, she has had extracted ninety two needles, whole and in part, from her limbs. They appear near the surface of the skin, dark spots indicating their presence. Miss Weaver is about 34 years of age and is quite eccentric, though intelligent. She maintains that she is bewitched. She has been watched frequently and awakens out of an apparently deep slumber with screams. It is generally believed that she is a monomaniac on the subject of sticking herself full of needles, but her parents and friends assert that they have watched her repeatedly and found no evidences of such actions. The surgeon cut into the flesh yesterday and extracted five small pieces of steel, black and apparently corroded, without causing the young lady any apparent pain. The needles are generally found with the heads pointing to the surface, but often the reverse.

A Court Scene.

A special despatch from Detroit, Mich., says: A sensational and unusual case occurred in the Wayne Circuit Court this morning. Judges left their benches, lawyers and deputies stood up and shouted, and the spectators became a howling mob for twenty minutes. Colonel John Atkinson and Mr. Robert E. Frazer squared before each other for a fight. It was the culmination of a long standing feud, the two being leading lawyers of the State. Frazer and Atkinson engaged in bantering colloquy yesterday, in which Atkinson good naturedly remarked that his side was all right unless the other side had fixed jury. Frazer said that his partner, Levi L. Barbour, had looked out for that. This was also said good naturedly.

This morning Mr. Barbour spoke to Atkinson complaining that his remark about fixing the jury was ungentlemanly. Atkinson said he had offended no more than Barbour's partner, Frazer, and an altercation followed between the latter and Atkinson. Frazer called Atkinson a liar and the latter made a lunge at Frazer, and in an instant the greatest confusion prevailed. Order was restored after a while, but the affair has been the talk of the town all day.

"Stand and Deliver."

Mr. James Foust, son of Capt. Ross Foust of this city, was interrupted by a trio of footpads at the Presbyterian church corner, at an early hour on Saturday morning, and with three pistols pointed at his head had his pockets rifled of their contents. Mr. Foust had been at a birthday party held in honor of one of his West Huntingdon neighbors, and at the close of the party accompanied one of the lady guests to her home in the northwestern section of the city. Leaving her he started to go to his home, and when reaching the Presbyterian church, corner Fifth and Millin streets, three men stepped up before him, pointed revolvers at him and requested him to "hold up his hands," which, under the circumstances, he did without ceremony. Two of the men continued to cover him with their revolvers while the third searched his pockets. They took his purse containing about three dollars and fifty cents, and after appropriating the money threw the purse into the street, where it was recovered by Mr. Foust after daylight. The highwaymen insisted that he had more money about his person and when told that he had not, they opened and examined some letters which they found in a side-pocket of his coat, thinking that he had it secreted in them. Finding nothing more they permitted him to go. Mr. Foust had been engaged for some days in collecting coal bills for his father, and was no doubt "spotted" by the thieves as a gentleman likely to have considerable money about him, but they were fooled.

This is the third or fourth time that some of our citizens have been compelled to deliver up to these footpads, and the next time a similar attempt is made it will afford us much pleasure to announce that the thief was killed in his tracks. This is exactly what they deserve.—Huntingdon Journal, Feb. 19.

Travels in Europe.

Rev. Philip Graff, M. A., will deliver a course of three lectures in the Court House, in Middletown, on Tuesday evenings, March 2nd, March 9th and March 16th, 1886, for the benefit of the Lutheran church of this place. His lectures are based upon his travels in Europe. They are prepared in a style of the highest literary order and delivered with exquisite taste, fire and skill, and are, from beginning to end, an intellectual treat. Wherever they have been delivered they have been listened to by large and appreciative audiences and have been highly complimented by the press.

A first class orchestra will furnish music each evening. Tickets for the three lectures, 50 cents, for sale in Middletown by W. H. Rolman, Banks & Sandoe, Joseph Pennell, C. F. Hinkle and J. W. Kirk, and at Patterson by R. L. Guss and at Banks' drug store. Doors open at 6.30 P. M. Lecture begins at 7.30. The 9.45 P. M. train east will stop at Port Royal each evening of the lectures. Read the following press notices:

"The lecture of Rev. Philip Graff, at the English Lutheran Church last night was very largely attended and interesting to the audience being 'Ocean Trip and Paris.' Mr. Graff's ability as a lecturer is undoubtedly excellent, as the appreciation of the congregation last night is a true evidence."

"Mr. Graff pictures the subjects upon which he discourses so accurately in his listeners' mind's eye, that they almost hear the roll of the ocean's waves, the chatting and hubbub arising from the noisy rabble in the streets, and can almost perceptibly observe the beautiful sunrise upon the horizon of the silent sea, or see the many hundred beautiful sights and scenes in the queen of cities."—State Register, Springfield, Ill.

"Rev. Philip Graff, of Springfield, delivered the first of his three matchless lectures at the Tabernacle last night to a fair audience, and all in attendance were very much entertained.
