THRALL. (Appetite.)

I am held like a captive knight,

I am hidden away from sight, I cry like a child for the light, I am bound by the cruelest thongs, quiver with ourrage and wrongs,

Like a slave I sing a slave's songs. At night when the mad moon gleams, ciler my vile lot seems. For at night I dream a slave's dreams. At morning, at evening, at noon,

The thong far or near, late or soon, Makes me cry out for death as a boon. I quail 'neath a tyrant's dread eye, atter vague threats, and still try To sunder the horrible tie.

But my struggle is all in vain, My captor claims me again, And anon, I clank the same chain. Oh, cruelest bondage of all, Which well may the strongest appall, Hody free, but a soul in thrail.
