With the exception of the Yoshi wara, of which plenty hereafter, the two prisons of Tokto are the most interesting things I have seen in Japan These are, first, the great prison upo the Island of Ishikawa, at the south of the city, and, second, the convict and female prison of Ichigawa, in the cen ter of the city itself. The former is completely isolated all communication with the main land being by police ferry, and contains 2,052 men and boys, all of whom are serving terms of ten years or less. The latter contains 1,400 men and 110 women, among whom are many serving life sent-There is a convict farm atences. punishment is inflicted. Otherwise the two prisons resemble each other so losely that it is not necessary to dis tinguish between them in description. The entrance is through a massive wooden gateway into a guard room adjoining which are the offices of the director and officials. The prison itself consists of a score or more of detached one story buildings, all of wood and some of them merely substantial sheds, under which the rougher labor, like stone breaking, is performed. The dormitories are enormous wooden formed of bars as thick as one's arm before which again is a narrow covered

The door was solemnly unlocked and dung back, and I was motioned to enter. It was the punishment cell, another spotless wooden box, well ventilated but perfectly dark, and with walls so thick as to render it practically silent. "How many prisoners have been in it during the last month?" asked. The director summoned the chief warder and repeated my ques-"H'tori mo gozaimasen -none whatever," was the reply "What other punishments have you? "None whatever." "No flogging?" It was a perfectly harmless remark in itself and made without reflection or fore thought. We were sipping our coffee after dinner, and there was a casual reference to Thanksgiving. Something prompted me to say:

"How I used to look forward to Thanksgiving when I was a boy. It was one of the events of the year to select and bring in from the cornfield the Thanksgiving (pumpkin, and what pies it roade! Somehow! don't get any punkin pies nowadays such as mother used to make!"

And I took a sip of coffee and lazily puffed at my cigarette without a suspicion of having turned on the consequences, as it were.

An omlnous sort of silence made me glance, after a minute, across at my series.
