The term "capital punishment,"

Death by stoning was, in all probability, the earliest method of punishing crimes, the earliest method of punishing crimes, the death penalty was prepared penalty. From the extremely remprehensive code of capital offenses which appeared in the Mosaic code, it is to be concluded that a death by stoning was a very common occurrence, and that the "young men of the congregation" to whom were intrusted the fullies of executions.

The oriental nations have always been remarkable for the ingenious cruelty of their death punishments although it is doubtful whether they have been more cruel than the seif styled highly civilized nations of the west. Death has come from slow strangulation from a rope, as was in vogue in China, for instance, and at the same time from the use of boiling oil, which was poured on the joints after they were dislocated; by mechanical means as in France and Germany, from flaying, or stripping the skin off the body as was formerly done in England, and from pressure between planks, on the upper of which great weights were placed, as was also in vogue in England at one time.

Decapitation ceased in England in 1745, but it is still performed in France and some of the German states, in the first country by the guillotine and in the second by the sword, the instrument employed in England having been the broad ax, Decapitation with the sword is also a capital punishment in China. The two handed sword was in me in France before the guillotine was introduced, while for great crimes the victim was broken on the wheel.
