Horses Stolen and Recovered.

Shortly after daylight on the morning of the 8th inst., Squire C. B. Horning of this town stood in a woods that he owns on the far side of the ridge north of town, two miles dictant, where he expected to meet Jacob Sieber who was to haul wood for him.

It is one of the most secluded pieces of woodland near this town, and a man might lie there a week and not be found in any season of the year, excepting in the gunning season when the ridge is overrun with hunters.

The Squire was about to cut away some brush wood for the passage of the expected team and wagon, when he caught signt of two horses standing not far apart. Another look and he saw a thin column of smoke rising from the middle of the space between the animals. He looked again and by the fire lay a man or two men he is not certain which.

he said to himself, and he felt like going straight to the fire, and there demand the surrender of the thieves, but in a flash his mind revolted. the man or men may shoot me. And then there came vividly back to his recollection, a scene in Illinois years ago when he saw a horse thief turn and shoot a pursuing sheriff, dead.

Yet he hesitated. He felt certain that the horses had been stolen, and he was just as certain that the thief or thieves lay in sight by the fire. He had an axe and with that he could battle for the stolen property, and capture or drive off the party that had brought the horses there, but then came the thought, if I receive the horses and take them to town, who knows, the owners may appear upon the scene about the time I get there and I may be suspicioned of having harbored stolen horses. With this sensative thought running through his mind he determined to to secure the horses, and the party that had them in possession. He hastily turned away to go to Oberholtzer's for help. He had but gone a few steps till he heard the strokes of an axe. Hasting in the direction he came upon Michael Stoner and his son Abram who were cutting railroad ties.

Reinforced with the Stoners, he felt certain of securing bag and baggage, horses and all about the fire, but when the three men arrived at the ground all that greeted their eyes was the smoke and embers of the fire. Horning hasteaned in the direction of town to give the alarm. On his way he noticed the tracks of three horses going towards the place where he had made the discovery, and that hurried him on to Mifflintown. Looking at the tracks as he hastened along, he noticed that a track coming down the ridge as if away from the camping place, and he inclines to the belief that the thief or thieves had three horses on the ground and that one broke away or was ridden away.

THE HORSES STOLEN.

When the squire came into town he found groups of people standing about the streets talking about two horses that had been stolen from beyond the river, one from John Jenkins, four miles west of town; one from Solomon Shirk three miles west of town.

Both Jenkins and Shirk believed that the horses had been taken westward, but had come to town as the most central point from which to arouse the Horse Protection Company to which they belong. A number of the members of the Company had already been notified of the theft. A number of the company were in town preparing to start on their designated routes.

Horning's information took all by surprise.

A FRUITLESS SEARCH.

There was a rush for the ridge, men a foot, men a horseback, men in buggies, all armed, some with pistols, some with shot guns hastened to search the woods, all in the highest expectation of taking a part in, or hearing of the speedy capture of the thief and horses, but the search of the woods was fruitless. The tracks of the horses were found and that was all.

IN TOWN AND ON THE ROAD.

Horning had scarcely turned his back upon the camp to look for help when the thief arose, mounted one of the horses and led the other down the south side of the ridge by the Oberholtzer Vineyard, southward, and by a private road through the Brubaker, Schweier and Yeakley farms to the Main road leading from Mifflintown to McAlisterville, and on that road came to this town to Third street, thence along said street, southward to the quarry, and around by Senator Patterson's property to Main street to Cedar Spring road, and out that road by Daniel Pannabaker's blacksmith shop, by Abram Moist's and Wellington Smith's farms. Beyond the Smith farm he passed Joseph Rothrock who was out notifying members of the horse company of the theft and arranging for the pursuit. Rothrock did not know the man or the horses, but they were so near to town that he did not think they could be the cause of him being out on the road calling out his neighbors to engage in a chase to catch a horse thief. When he came to town he learned from a description of the stolen horses that he had passed the animals. Then began an

EAGAR PURSUIT.

There was a wild ride out the Cedar Spring road. Out the pursuers went to the Cedar Spring farm to where the road forks, and there the left hand road to McAlisterville was taken by pursuers on information from people that had come in on the road that leads to Van Wert, that neither man or horses had been seen on it. On they rode, William Murry, who was not a member of the horse company was in the lead, and in the long stretch of road along the north side of the Cedar Spring ridge, he caught sight of the thief and horses. He urged his horse to his best speed, and near by the Mennonite church, he came close upon the man and horse. Murry shouted a halt. The thief sprang from the horse he was riding, leaped a fence into a field and ran away. Murry speedily dismounted, tied the two horses to a fence, remounted his own beast and at full speed dashed down the road to Shirk's lane, into the lane as hard as the horse could run to a certain point where he sprang from the beast leaped over the fence into the field and intercepted the thief, pointed an empty pistol at him and shouted,

HOLD UP YOUR HANDS.

The thief thought his last day had come and cried out "don't shoot," and held up his hands.

LODGED IN JAIL.

Murry conducted his prisoner to the road where he left the captured horses. A number of other pursuers came up and thief was placed in the "Buck" wagon of Mr. Renninger and brought to town and lodged in jail at the hour of noon. An empty flask of colored glass, a small amount of money and a pass book or two with names in them were found on his person, but he had no arms of any kind. Deputy Sheriff Lapp took possession of his effects. Shortly after dinner he was accorded a hearing before Squire E. B. McCrum. William Murry gave information that he had found him in possession of the two horses, owned respectively by John Jenkins and Solomon Shirk.

THE PRISONER

gave the name of Henry Sprecker but had nothing to say, and was sent back to jail to await trial for horse stealing. He is a man of fair complexion and at first sight would be pronounced a foreign German. He speaks good English without a brogue, and says he is an American by birth, and was a soldier in the Union Army.

CONJECTURES ON THE THEFT.

The fact that Sprecher was found resting so near town by Squire Horning, coupled with the fact that he rode into and out of the town with the stolen horses, about 9 o'clock in the morning, has led to an expression of conjectures on the theft. Some men conjecture that he must not be in his right mind to act so queerly. Others conjecture that he became confused by the darkness of the night and missed the road north of town and instead of going out the road by Cuba Mill dam, he took the road that leads through the Moyer farm into the woods where Horning discovered him. Others conjecture that as there were three tracks leading to his camping place on the ridge, and one track away from it down the ridge by the way he went up, that he was piloted to that place by a third party from Solomon Shirk's barn, and in coroboration of that conjecture they cite the fact that a second horse of Shirk's was out of the stable and from its appearance had been on the road and had been ridden.

WHAT THE THIEF SAYS.

He has been visited by a number of citizens to whom he talked freely. He said he got off a freight train on Sunday night preceeding the Tuesday morning, January 8, on which he took the horses. His object in stealing the horses was to sell them. He believed Williamsport might be a place where he could sell them. He had no one to help him. Had two of Shirk's horses. The one did not suit him. He turned it loose. It followed him a distance when he dismounted and stoned it back. After the stoning it did not follow him and he believed it went home. He wanted to ride out the valley between Shade mountain and the ridge north of town, but missed the road somewhere in the valley and became confused, and at last was so lost in the woods that he came to a halt, built a fire and lay down by it till daylight. When daylight came he could not locate himself, and did not know that he was riding into Mifflintown till he was in the place. He thought it was some other town probably McAlisterville.

UNO.

Charles Aucker, son of Tobias Aucker, of this town called to see a friend at Minertown last Saturday evening. About 9 o'clock P. M. he discovered that his horse that he had unhooked from the buggy and tied to a fence was gone. The neighborhood was searched; the horse was not found. The young man came home and aquainted his father with the loss. Search was instituted till two o'clock on Sunday morning when it was thought the horse had been stolen. The next thing to do was to get out the Horse Protection Company. Members of the company in town were aroused. Reward and description, posters were printed, and riders were sent out to notify the company through the county. After day light, Mr. Aucker received word from Michael Stoner who lives near town that his horse with harness and blanket on was found tied in his barn yard. There is more or less mystery connected with the transfer of the beast from the place at which Charles was calling to the stable yard of Michael Stoner.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, including Paris, 1878, they have met with best medals awarded to musical instruments, they have received; and invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim a superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the practical and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Structure," by which the tone of which is secured in a greater degree of purity and sympathetic quality, of singing tone, together with greater evenness of tone, greater capacity to stand in tune and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and dealers, with, together with descriptive catalogue, (sixty-six pages) Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments also received.
