SENTINEL & REPUBLICAN

MIFFLINTOWN,
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1889.

B. F. SCHWEIER,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

A week ago and the moon was full, and daily papers were full of accounts of suicide of people of high and low degree.

A Chicago bank president has been arrested, charged with attempted bribery—offering $5000 to school directors to make him treasurer of the school fund.

The Legislature of this state will go to New York on the 30th to participate in the Centennial of the inauguration of General George Washington as President.

The Philadelphia Inquirer is leading off in the advocacy of an industrial policy of protection for the Southern states which meets with favor in administration circles at Washington.

Yorkers have put up in cotton seed oil and sold as sardines. Well, why should not young Americans shad put up in Maine be as good as the real sardines from the South of France and from Cerily?

The Fall near his Heart.

From the North American.

The death of an old soldier from the effect of a confederate bullet received on the bloody field of Gettysburg, and which he had carried in proximity to his heart for nearly twenty six years, was revealed by a post mortem examination made by Dr. Formad on Friday, by which the fact was established beyond a doubt.

When the nation was imperilled and the call was made for troops, Anton Merck a weaver then in the prime of life, shouldered his musket and marched to the front, resolved to do his share toward the preservation of his adopted country. Where ever his regiment was called Anton was with the rest, and no braver man or better man ever answered to the roll-call. He was always in the hot of the fight. Through all the battles in which he was engaged he saw his comrads fall beside him, but he escaped without a scratch until he reached the bloody field of Gettysburg.

On the last day of the fight and just as Lee's lines began to waver before their fight, Merck fell to the ground with no less than three rebel bullets in his body. He lay on the field for several hours, and when carried to the hospital tent the doctor gravely shook their heads. There was but little hope for the man's recovery, but there was still life and determination in the poor fellow's body, and every aid possible was rendered him.

Two of the balls were found and extracted, but the third could not be located, and while the wounded man persisted that there was still another in his body, the surgeons agreed after a consultation and thorough examination that he must be mistaken. Works were sent by Merck to the hospital, and for weeks he chafed under the inactivity of the convalescent camp until he was given permission to return to his regiment and resume the duties and hardships of a soldier.

He remained in the service until the surrender of the Confederate army at Appomattox, when he was honorably discharged. He returned to his wife and home in Maryland and soon after resumed work in one of the mills. He frequently complained of his pains near his heart, and always averred to his wife and friends that they resulted from the bullet, which had never been discovered. His general health remained good, however, and he was able to follow his trade until about six months ago, when, at the age of seventy three years, he lost an arm by being caught in the machinery.

He had barely recovered from the effect of the accident when, on the 20th of March, his wife returned to their home after a short absence, and found him lying at the foot of the stairway dead. The Coroner was notified and when Messenger Kurtz visited the house he found that death had been broken, the head bloody and other evidences which led him to believe that death had been caused by the fall. He recommended that a post mortem examination be made, but the widow objected, and when the inquest was held a verdict of accidental death was rendered by the jury.

After Mr. Merck had somewhat recovered from the shock caused by her husband's death, she remembered his repeated talks about his suffering from the old wound, and she was at last induced by her friends to have an investigation made. She stated her case to Coroner Ashbridge and he gave her permission to have the body disinterred for the purpose of having a post-mortem examination.

On Friday Dr. Formad visited Leverington Cemetery, Roxborough, where Merck was buried. The body was exhumed and there close to the brave old soldier's heart, was the bottom piece of lead received at Gettysburg. There was also full proof that the man's death was caused by pericarditis or inflammation of the membrane of the heart, and not by the injuries received by the fall at the time of his death. It is presumed however, that death struck him as he attempted to descend the stairs, and was the cause of the fall.

This discovery will entitle Mrs. Merck to receive the pension drawn by her husband during his life for honorable wounds receivedin the line of duty, and also furnishes a most remarkable case for surgical investigation and study.

The bullet got in its work at last.

Her Silence Saved Me.

Contributed by the W. C. T. U's.

"I remember," said a young man, "being in company with several thoughtless girls. Among them, however, there was one exception; a serious, quiet and beautiful woman, whose religious opinions were well known, and whose pen had for a long time spoken eloquently in the case of truth and virtue through the columns of our village paper. Suddenly I conceived the thought of bantering her on religious subjects, and with the foolhardiness of impiety, I launched forth with some shale infidel objections, that none but the fool who sayeth in his heart, 'There is no God,' would venture to reiterate. The flock of silly goslings about me laughed and uttered, and I encouraged by their mirth, grew bold, and repeated my intimations, occasionally glancing toward the principal butt of my fun. She did not seem to notice me at all; but she did not smile, did not look away, and did not look at me.

"Still I continued my impious harrangue, thinking that she must refute something, that she would not surely bear her own faith thus held up by a heardless boy. The snickerers around me gratifully began to glance toward her. Her face was so quiet, so even solemn in its quietness, that seriousness stole over them, and I stood alone, striving by my own senseless laughter to keep up my fast sinking courage.

"She still never spoke, nor smiled scarcely moved, her immobility grew awful; I began to stutter—to pause—to feel cold and strange—I could not tell how. My courage oozed off; my heart grew faint—I was conquered.

"That night after I went home, in reflecting over my foolhardy nefariare, I could have secured myself. The sweet angelic countenance of my mute accuser came up before me in the visions of the night; I could not sleep. Nor did I rest until some days after I went to the home of the lady I had insulted, and asked her pardon. Then she spoke to me, how mildly I how Christianly I how sweetly!

"I was subdued, melted down; and it was not long after that I became, I trust, an humble Christian, and looked back to miserable unbelief with horror.

"Her silence saved me. Had she answered with warmth, with sarcasm, with sneer, or with a rebuke, I should have grown stronger in my mantaring, and more determined in my opposition. But she was silent, and I felt as if my voice was striving to make itself heard against the words of an Omnipotent God! O, how often would it be better, if instead of vain argument or hot dispute, the Christian would use the magic of silence!"—Evangelical Messenger.

Death of a Hero.

New York, April 17.—A hero, clad in the brown, greasy overalls, check jumper and cap of a switchman, this morning lost his life in the yard of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Jersey City, while saving from the frightful death he met a ten year old child. He was Patrick McAtamney, an Irishmen, 42 years old, who supported his wife and family of seven young children by switching trains for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Jersey City.

He was standing in the door of his little house about 9.30 o'clock, waiting for a single car to be backed by an engine on a sidetrack. Just as the car reached him a little ten year old boy, who had been picking coal from an ash heap near by, stepped on the track immediately in front of the car. McAtamney saw him, and, jumping to the track, pushed the boy violently from it. The next instant, however the car struck the man, instantly killing him. The engineer of the train ignorant that he had run over a man, while a horrified group of employes gathered quickly about the remains. They were conveyed to the station and the dead man's family notified. The boy whose life had been saved hurried away before his name could be learned. McAtamney had been in the employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad for over twenty years.

New Bloomfield Times: A gentleman residing near Williams' Grove moved to Lloydsville last week. He had two large four horse wagons loaded with furniture and procured a traction engine to which he attached the two wagons and that way conveyed his furniture across the North mountain.

WHITE CAPS IN TUSCARORA

VISIT A STOREKEEPER

CUT HIS THROAT!

NO, CUT HIS HAIR AND BEARD!

For God's Sake Don't Shoot!

I'LL MOVE TO-MORROW!

At midnight on the 12th inst., a Company of White Caps, visited the grocery candy and tobacco store of Samuel Fisher about a mile north of McClayville this county and after frightening Fisher till he was as limp as a rag, they flourished flaring torches in his face as he lay on the floor and made him promise that he would vacate the premises the next day.

Fisher was in town last Friday with his daughter Lizzie a comely girl of 15 years of age. They having come down the valley on Harvey McGahey's wagon.

The victim of the White Cap's visit is a small light weight sickly looking wheezy voiced man of middle age, the father of 6 children and the owner of a house and lot of 15 acres about a mile from the store he kept. He has been keeping groceries, salt, candy, tobacco, &c., for a year and more. His daughter Lizzie has been staying with him most of the time. Lately he has been afflicted with bronchitis to such a degree that Dr. Ritter has been attending him. His daughter during his late illness when he was not able to get up would get his medicine for him at night when he had severe coughing spells, and when his illness was at its worst she lay across the foot of his bed so that he could awaken her with the touch of a foot. When he was in health she slept in an adjoining room. Within some weeks past, he has been able to help himself and on the night in question he heard a knock at the door. Then there was a call: "Sam open the door, let us in." He opened the door. It was pitch dark out and raining and thundering. A party of white capped and white shirted men stepped in. They had a lantern. They said "you have been sleeping with your daughter," and the next instant a couple laid hold of him, one placed his hand over his mouth, and he sank down as limp as a rag. The leader asked, "what shall we do with him." The crowd answered, "Cut his throat, cut his throat." "No," said the leader "we will not cut his throat, we'll cut his hair and beard, and if he will promise to leave this place and take his things with him we'll not cut his throat," but if he don't get out of this place to-morrow we'll shoot him," and three of them flourished revolvers. Fisher had by this time recovered himself to whisper for God's sake don't shoot, I'll move to-morrow." Raising his eyes he caught sight of five White Caps, and the fringe of a red beard projecting from one. He believes he recognized the voices of three of them and says they do not live over three miles from that place. They had a pair of shears or nippers with them with which they gouged out large grayes and holes in his enormous beard and very long hair.

After repeated threats and violent flourishes of revolvers they left going in the direction of Mifflintown. Reaching a point not far from the store they discharged a volley from their pistols.

Fisher after they were gone, thought of his daughter but she was not about. He did not know from his confused and sickly state whether she had been killed, but he feared the worst and hurried out as best he could to Robert Campbell's house near by. There to his joy was his daughter who had escaped from the house by leaping from a back window. She wanted Caudell to go to the rescue of her father who she said was being murdered but Caudell thought it best to stay in doors.

The next morning Campbell finished the barbering of Fisher's hair and beard, cropping them closer than they had been in a long time. The covered shoe keeper then employed Harvey McGahey with his team and wagon to haul the goods of the store to fisher's dwelling place and in that way made sure of escaping from the second impending visit of the dread White Caps.

When last seen by a representative of the Sentinel and Republican he was in Squire J. B. M. Todd's office and was talking about looking up a lawyer.

Burned to Death.

Baltimore, April 17.—A special from Danville, Va., says: "Later reports from the great forest fires in Patrick county show that first reports were slightly exaggerated as to the number of dwellings burned—fifty odd farmers burned out, and not one hundred, as reported. The destruction of cattle and hogs was very great, and not exaggerated in the first reports. Dr. Abe Robertson, a prominent citizen, while fighting the fire, surrounded by smoke and flames, was burned to death."

Fermanagh Township Items.

The peach crop is not damaged by freezing as was supposed. For the sake of the peach enterprise we all rejoice over this.

There will soon now be a big "smear" in the road matter over here in Shimvalley. Three men in every five want a new road. There are now four or five through the valley counting those recently granted at a cost of perhaps a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a piece. One of two things ought to be done for the good of every body. The township should be divided and let them have all the roads they want; or else let some trust buy the whole valley and make a shooting match of it next New Year.

There is nothing that will make the average farmer squeal sooner than heavy taxation. And local taxes which he entirely controls by the reckless manner in which he deposits his ballot at the Spring Election institute his chief burden. Small selfish and absurd things control his actions and consequently a dozen or more preferences will be had for each office to be filled and as many candidates will be balloted for. The result is that the election is a farce and half the time officials are not what are desired and the petty office is farmed most wofully while the farmer farms his crops. Be it understood the latter has not time, or, at least, dont take any if he has to keep watch over the discharge of the Township trusts by the respective officials. In consequence as might be expected its eyes and ears are not opened until the collectors makes his demands. Then the farmer howls and growls, rails and wails, groans and moans. At this time we have a blessed illustration in Fermanagh Township in the supervisorship. It is said that about four or five years ago there was money actually in the treasury and about the same time there was no need for a special or money tax. Since then from 5 to 7 hundred dollars were collected each year and to-day we are five hundred dollars in debt. As there is no Auditors report published yet this may be taken as a false rumor, but it is feared it is only too true. We know there was a call of some where near six hundred dollars last year, but report has it that a special money tax was levied and collected for the payment of this debt the money was wasted contrary to law for some other purpose. It is a principle in law that if a tax is levied for a specific purpose it must be used for that purpose and can not be lawfully applied to anything else. Our Auditors are men who know the law and I cannot believe that they will on oath allow money to be diverted from its proper channel. Yet rumor has it that the six or seven hundred dollars of money tax collected in last year was used most sinfully and illegally for current expenses even and that the settlement has been confirmed by the Auditors. If this be so, and for the present I will disbelieve it. Yet the average farmer may as well prepare for a square growl about the time the Auditors report appears. It is suggested that an appeal be taken and the whole matter relegated to the court. It is time that when man come out to solicit office to help the dear people that they learn that they are amenable to somebody. Let everybody wait patiently, but earnestly for the whole truth and nothing short of the truth. Inex.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION proposed to the citizens of this Commonwealth by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, for their approval or rejection at a special election to be held June 18, 1889. Published by order of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, in pursuance of Article XVIII of the Constitution.

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of this Commonwealth:

SECTION 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met That the following is proposed as an amendment to the constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:

AMENDMENT.

Strike out from section one, of article eight, the four qualifications for voters which reads as follows:

First. That they shall have been twenty-one years of age or upwards, he shall have paid within two years, a state or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months, and paid at least one month before the election," so as that section when read will read as follows:

"Every male citizen, twenty-one years of age, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections:

First. He shall have been a citizen of the United States at least one month.

Second. He shall have resided in the state one year (or if, having previously been a qualified elector or native born citizen of the state, he shall have removed therefrom and returned, then six months) immediately preceding the election.

Third. He shall have resided in the election district where he shall offer to vote at least two months immediately preceding the election.

Fourth. If twenty-two years of age or upwards, he shall have paid, within two years, a state or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months and paid at least one month before the election."

So that section when read as follows:

Every male citizen twenty-one years of age, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at the public place of the election district of which he shall at the time be a resident and elsewhere if he shall have been a citizen of the United States at least three days.

Second. He shall have resided in the state one year (or if, having previously been a qualified elector or native born citizen of the state, he shall have removed therefrom and returned, then six months) immediately preceding the election.

Third. He shall have resided in the election district where he shall offer to vote at least three days immediately preceding the election.

Fourth. If twenty-two years of age or upwards, he shall have paid, within two years, a state or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months and paid at least one month before the election."

SECTION 2. And be it further resolved, That the following amendment is proposed to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the Eighteenth Article thereof:

AMENDMENT.

There shall be an additional article to said Constitution to be designated as Article XIX, as follows:

ARTICLE XIX.

The manufacture, sale, or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquor, to be used as a beverage, is hereby prohibited, and any violation of this prohibition shall be a misdemeanor, punishable as shall be provided by law.

The manufacture, sale, or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquor for other purposes than as a beverage may be allowed in such manner only as may be prescribed by law. The General Assembly shall, at the first session succeeding the adoption of this article of the Constitution, enact laws with adequate penalties for its enforcement.

A true copy of the Joint Resolution.
