A London engineering journal gives some further information about the successful experiment, conducted in Port Chester Creek, of jumping a torpedo boat over a boom. "The experiment was made by the officers of the Vernon. The boom, which was 20 feet in length, differed from the usual spars which are used for the defence of harbors against torpedo attacks, in that it was 6 feet broad and surmounted by a number of spikes, which it was supposed would receive the boat and hold it a prisoner. No. 49 first-class torpedo boat, which had been strengthened for the purpose, was selected to attack the boom. Having made a few preliminary runs in the harbor to enable her engines to obtain full speed, she made a dash at the box a rate of about 20 knots. this speed her stem was lifted out of the water almost as high as the toom itself, which sunk on impact, and before it could rise to the surface the momentum of the craft had carried her over. She was subsequently berthed, and it was found that neither her cut-water nor propeller had suffered in the least, nor had a single plate been bulged or started. The result of the experiment goes far to show that either the booms must be duplicated or that they must be supplemented with nets, foot of, you can put the big end up.
