A Bride's awful Beath.

From the New York evening Sun. A terrible occurrence has just happened at Woile, near sollub, in Prussia. Three months ago an inhabitant of that place married a very pretty young working woman. The other night the neighbors were awakened by a grea noise coming from the room of the newly married couple but they went to sleep again when the noise ceased. The next day the door of the room remained shut and a locksmith was eventually sent for. When the door was burst open a horrible spectacle presented itself to the sight of the neighbors. The husband embued in blood, with foam on his lips was extended on the bed, which was torn her last sleep. The nose and ears of the unfortunate woman had been detached by chewing. The breast was horribly disfigured.
