THE TOWERS OF SILENCE A Visit to the Burial Places of the

A hundred yards distant through the trees intervening is one of the gloomy standing, because the makers Towers of Silence, fully inkeeping with its gloomy name. As visitors are not permitted to approach nearer than 100 feet, we are directed to a small working model under a lilac just off the garden, Here, with the aid of a reference card, we examine the eternal arrangements of the tower. It is a roofless, circular building of stone and painted white, 300 feet in circumference and about sixty in height; thirty feet from the base on the side facing the garden is a small entrance, just large enough to admit the bearers and body, closed by double iron doors. These doors open on the main platform, which is paved with large slabs of stone and divided into three rows of shallow open reeptacles, into which are placed the naked corpses to await the coming is for males (adult), the second for females and the third, or inner row for children. These three rows correspond with three moral precepts of the Zoroastrian religion-good deeds, good words, good thoughts. Between the rows are foot paths for the bearers to move about. In the center of the tower is a great well 150 feet in circumference and forty to fifty feet in depth, into which the dry bones are thrown after being denuded of flesh. From this great well toward the cardinal points of the compass diverge four underground drains each of which has its terminus, about thirty feet away, a small well. The bottom of each of these small wells is covered with a thick layer of sand, Pieces of charcoal and sandstone are also placed at the end of each drain. Thus the rain water coming from the great weil and bringing with it the decomposed osseous matter passes through two sets of filters for purification before entering the ground, thereby observing a tenet of the Zoroustrian religion-that

"mother earth shall not be defiled." A corpse is carried into the tower by two bearers, called Nassaslars, who alone are priveleged to enter; the clothes are then removed, the body placed in one of the receptacles and the bearer withdraw. Now is the opportunity for the vultures to fulfill the duties of their office. Upon the approach of the procession hundreds of them arise from the tops of the palms, which have become withered and dead from contact with the carniverous bodies, and hover in a circle above until the bearers have gone, Then like darts they descend-a boiling seething mass of carrion, each particle of which, inteni only upon precedence, is quarreling and fighting with the other in its horrible work. In an hour or two the corpse is entirely stripped of its flesh; the bones are then left until perfeetly dried by the heat of the tropical sun, then thrown into the well, where, in course of time, they crumble to dust. According to the teachings of Zoroaster, earth, fire and water are sacred, and in order to avoid their pollution it is strictly enjoined that the dead bodies shall not be buried in the ground or thrown into the sea.
