quently with adults, as well as with children, as dyspepsia (weakness of digestion). No other manifests itself by so many different symptoms, and is consequently mistaken for some other disorder. No other has more serious results if neglected, and yet no other is more easily cured than so-calle's indigestion. It occurs with babies and teethine children and with grown persons particu larly in consequence of a cold on the stomach, (catarrh) caused by wet feet, improper dust or atemperance in eating or drinking. The use of key beverages is particularly dangerous in this respect. It manifests itself at first by loss of appetite, aversion to certain kinds of food, a desire to vomit, coated tongue, parched lips desire to vomit, coated tongue, parched ines and sharp pains just above and between the eyes. If the trouble continues for any length of time, the patients grow thin and weak, and and in consequence become peevish and more rose. If the disease is contined to the stomach it is usually accompanied by constipation. If it extends into the intestincs, as is often the case with children, diarthoussets in, which is extremely weakening. If the disease is neglise it the the symptoms resemble those of inflamma-tion of the bowels or of the brain. More of issue to not the companies of the brain.
