The cloister of Trappists to-day existing in Kentucky and known as the "Abbey of Gethsemane," owes its direct origin to the Abbey of Da Meilleraye of the "Departments Loire Inferiure," in France, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The abbot of the latter had made an arrangement with the French Government to lay the foundation for a convent of their Order on property situated on the Island Martinique, and donoted to them by Louis Philippe. After the downfall of his regime the original plan was abandoned in favor of a colony in the United States, which was accomplished in

The Trappists possess but two mon-asteries in the United States—the above mentioned, which is the oldest, and one pear Dubucus Is a branch of the near Dubuque, Ia., a branch of the Abbey of Ireland.

Gethsemane comprise about seven hun- ty of sand in the bottom, and some dred acres of land, part of which is water in which a tiny creature peeped cultivated, the other consisting of ex-tensive woodland nills, which furnish the timber for the steam sawmill of the monastery. In the midst of this area are found the settlements of farmers. The monastery itself is reached by following a long avenue, inclosed on each side by a cedar hedge and shaded by a row of magnificent English elms, all of which were grown from one original tree.

Wandering through this delightful avenue's wondrous quiet, interrupted but now and then by the soft rustling of the tree tops and the half-hushed twitter of the birds nestling in their branches, one reaches the porter's lodge, a low brick structure, flanked on either side by two stone walls, which thus separate two worlds from each other. Emerging from the covered walk of the lodge there spreads before the enchanted eye a delicious corner of landscape-gardening-avenues and walks bordered by cedar hedges and so thickly strewn with shavings that the heaviest footfall is lost unbeard. Beautiful pattern-beds and luxuriant greenswards contrast barmoniously with the deep shadows thrown by solemn-looking Benedictine trees-a splendid place for pions recreation and serious contemplation. Near the end of the grounds we find hedged in an immense family of white rabbits, enjoying their playful sports surrounded by this grand and quiet solemnity.

The Abbey of Gethsemene is a selfsustaining institution, in which the well man is maintained, the sick nursed and the dead buried. The daily occupations are quite varied, resembling those in one of our modern factories, and offer sufficient play for the various grades of intellect.

The Trappist Order subjects its members to all the cloistral yowseternal and extreme poverty, chastity, industry, silence, separation, penitence and submission.

No Trappist monk is allowed to walk outside the cloister without permission; all tender and sympathetic emotions, which in this life visit the human heart, he is obliged to suppress. The death of his nearest relative is never announced to him. Forgotten by the world, he himself forgets the world.

TRAPPISTS IN KENTUCKY, THE STORY OF A HERMIT CRAB.

BY MARY J. PORTER.

"Have you seen the little lobster, Miss Alden?" The waitress at a board-ing-house by the seashore asked the question of one of the guesta. "No, I have not. Where is it?"

"In a tin pail on the back porch. Fay caught it this morning."
"Fay" was the black-eyed, barefooted, seven year-old son of the cook. On her way to look at the curiosity, Miss Alden must needs pass through the kitchen. "So your little boy has caught a lobster?" she said to the mistress of that apartment.

"Yes, miss. He's always looking

The cook, while talking, had brought in the tin pail. It contained a quantiout of a cockle shell. Fay, who hovered about his treasure like a guardian angel, stood by his mother's side.

"What a strange, little animal!" exclaimed Miss Alden, who was somewhat unfamiliar with the habits of shell-fish, "Do take it into the parlor and let the ladies see it." Fay obediently carried his amall aquarium into the parlor, Miss Alden going with him as assistant exhibitor.

"See what this boy has!" was her an-nonncement.

The several ladies and gentlemen present at once rose to their feet in order to examine the contents of the pail, "It's a lobster," said Fay.

"No, my man," laughed a professor of Natural History, who happened to be among the boarders. "That's a hermit crab. Where did you find "Down slong the beach. He was in Snother shell but I hammered it open so that my mother could see him."
"Oh, you did, did you? How is it, then, that he is in this shell now?"

"Why, you see, when I broke open the shell he was in, I put this one and another in front of him, and let him take his choice. "So he chose this one, and its too small for him? "Yes, sir. "The first one was larger, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir."

"A hermit crab is a queer little creature. It moves from one shell to another, according to its convenience. When it grows too large for the one it is in it goes into another that fits it nore comfortably."

While the professor was speaking one of the ladies touched the head of the crab with her knitting-needle, and it withdrew as far as possible into its shell. Then another lady carried the pail into a dark corner of the room, and the crab tried to get out again. When it was taken to the light it tried to hide itself once more. But the shell was a decided misfit. The crab could neither get out of it entirely, nor hide itself in it completely.

Fay soon thought it time to reach it from the crowd of admirers. As he took it out of the room he whispered to Miss Alden, "You may have this to take home with you."

"Ch, no, Fay, Ill not take it from

"Yes, Miss Alden, it's yours." Too much attention proved fatal to the hermit crab. When Fay went to look at it next morning he found it lying dead in the tin pail.

As she went out of the front door Fay stood in front of her. "The little crab died, Miss Alden,

"Did it, Fay? I'm sorry. Perhaps we played with it too much. "Yes, ma'am, I think so," answered

Whole libraries have been written about Malaria and malarial diseases by the learned men of all nations. How far the physicians may differ from one another in their views on other subjects, they all agree on this that the scat of Malaria is in the blood and that it particularly affects the mitt. Malaria may occur anywhere; but it is especially prevalent in damp and low lying regions with heavy soil. It occurs very seldom in northern Europe, but it prevails in North America, Central America and South America particularly in such parts of this continent which have a moist and warm climate. Malaria is not a contagious disease in the usual acceptation of the term. Even in those countries in which it appears in an endemic form it can be guarded against by a rational mode of living and the observance of the most common rules of health. Among these the most important are moderation in eating and drinking and avoiding the damp night-air. One of the most important conditions for the biood and a rapid removal of all waste matter from the body. The enlargement of the milit which is noticed in all malarial diseases and which in obstinate cases becomes hardening of the spiece, proves abundantly that the principal cause of the disease is to be found in the fact that the blood does not circulate as freely and easily as it ought. To cause the blood to circulate as free and easily as possible and to keep the intestinal canal in constant and healthful activity no better remedy is known than the St. Bernard Vegeta ble Pflis, prepared from the best medicinal herbs of the Alps. They can be obtained at 25 cts. a box from every first class draugist. If your druggists haven't them in stock, send 25c. to 'St. Bernard' Box 2416 New York City, and you will rec-ive some post paid by return mail.
