A MCD GIRL.

Once on a unie there was a little girl who lived in a house made of mud. She ate off mud plates, and drank out of mud cope Op the will hung mud brackets, with mud figures on them. The flowers from her garden she put into mud vases, und the garden itself was ornamented with mud figures. The greatest treasnres she had in the world were made of

By this time I suppose you can guess that the girl I spoke of had a bisque doll and set of china among her treasures. The dreadful thing I had to tell you is that your bisque doll is made of mud, is own cousin to the old brown vinegar jug down in the pantry, as well as to the coarse red bricks on the garden walk!

You didn't know she had such common relations? Well, let me tell you -- privately -- she's no worse for that. she is, that's the important thing.

The reason she's so different from

The next thing is to grind it to powder, and then it goes to the potters. These workmen mix it with water til about as thick as cream, and then strain it through fine sieves. It is now called "slip," and is ready for a new ingredient, which is flint. You've heard of things being as "hard as a flint;" and hard enough the poor potters found it, till they learned to burn it before trying to grind it.

They can't make cups out of "slip," their feet, and the object of it all is to get out the bubbles.

After this curious performance it ought to rest a long time. The Chinese let it lie twenty years in a damp cellar. I dare say your china cups could tell wonderful stories of life in France, and what they saw while they lay seasoning in some potter's cellar-that is, if they could talk.

The potter's wheel is a s rt of lathe, on which the damp clay is put, by the Viceroy Li, may be relied upon, ter sits before it, and with his hands shapes a cup, or a plate, or a jug in a few minutes.

Pressing, I told you, was another way of shaping things. This is done, of course, by moulds. Handles of cops and all small ornsments are made in moulds, and stuck on the cup or other dish while damp; and then comes the

When you would think the oven-or kiln, they call it—was full, a man stands at the door and puts in piece after piece, till there isn't room for another cup. Then the door is bricked up, fires are made under the kiln, and kept up several days and nights. More days are allowed for it to get cool, and not until every thing is cool enough to handle is the door opened and the bak-

This is how it is done: First they made a model exactly the shape the vake was to be, every little leaf and bud perfect. When it was done, and you couldn't bear to have it touched (if you saw it), a workman coolly buried it under a mound of plaster of Paris! The plaster soon hardened, and then it came off easily, and, behold, it was a perfect mould of the vase, and then they could make as make as many copies of the lovely model as they close. To make the Parian vace a thin allo was poured in, and in a few minutes poured out again.
