Nothing Wasted. In Paris nothing is wasted, not the smallest scrap of paper; that which every one else throws away here becomes a source of profit. Old provision tins, for instance, are full of money; the lead soldering is removed and melted down into cakes, and the tin goes to make children's toys. Old boots, however bad, always contain in the arch of the foot at least one COPYRIGHT HIS sound piece that will serve again, and generally there are two or three others in the sole, the heel, and at that fill your life, if you're a feeble, the back. refining. Dr. Harwood, an English divine of some two hundred years ago, went so far as to make a new and "elegant" translation. His purpose, as he modestly expressed it, was to "clothe the genuine ideas and detrines of the apostles with that propriety and perspicuity in which they themselves, I apprehend, would have exhibited them, had they lived and written in our language." Some of his attempts to avoid "the bald and barbarous language of the old vulgar version," are worth quoting as terrible examples of what elegant writing is not.
