Fire in The Lutheran Church.

About 9 o'clock on Saturday evening fire from the heater in the Lutheran church building nearly destroyed the commodious holy worship that the Lutheran congregation own in this town.

Wallace Fasiak, the sexton, had placed a fire in the heater in the cellar to warm the house comfortably for the next day—Sunday's service.

The fire was started in the heater about 4 P. M., on Saturday.

Shortly after 8 P. M. the sexton was in the church and fixed the heater in the usual way for the night. He lives close to the church building and had scarcely started himself at home, when Mrs. Fasiak, his wife, came in and said "The church is on fire."

They each took a bucket of water and ran into the building, down the center aisle to the heater register where the floor was ablaze and dashed the water on the flame, and then out of the house shouting, "fire! fire! fire!"

Chairs with a rush came within the fire and attached them to the water plug at the jail.

The fire that was visible was then raging a little front of the center of the building in the floor, about the heater register, and from that to the north wall of the church, but the smoke was so dense that no one dared to enter and there was no elevated place from which the water could be turned down on the fire, and the passage between the sexton's house and the church was so dark that the men dragged the hose through with difficulty and mounted a fence along the sexton's property and from there aimed the nozzle of the hose in the direction of the fire.

The water came and when it struck the church windows that intervened, the glass went in with a bang and jungle that added an other unpleasant sound to the din and roar that was making night hideous around the building, but from that position the best thing that the men who were managing the hose could do was to aim at the ceiling just over the fire. The water struck the ceiling and fell in torrents over the fire and all surrounding parts, perfectly saturating everything there, the pews, carpet, and floor where the fire raged and held the flames below from making much progress in breaking through.

But with all that the fire was not quenched.

In the darkness, along the north wall of the church, not far from the ground some one managed to manage the hose, encountered a thick stream of smoke coming out of a hole in the wall, so dense was the smoke that the flame that raged inside the cellar could not be seen through it.

"Here is the place," he shouted, "to get the water on the fire."

The water was turned in there and in less than five minutes after the fire was out, for directly that hole the water went through into the focal point of the fire and on and all around the heater.

The hole or passage through the wall into which the water was turned is the cold air passage to the heater.

So thoroughly had the parts about the heater been drenched that on Sunday a large pool of water lay in front of the concern in the cellar.

The water thrown from the hose was clear and did not stain the seats or carpet. The plaster on the ceiling was wet and damaged in some, and the paper on the walls was smoke stained and a great hole in the floor was burned, and other minor damage was done, but under a capable and vigorous management all damages including repapering and repainting may be replaced within two weeks.

It was a narrow escape for the Lutheran church building and had it not been for Macedonia water the building would be in ruins to-day.

The people have just about become used to the late calamity of the democratic election when, the breath is almost taken away by the astronomical announcement that a large comet is coming in from space seemingly direct toward the earth. It is at such a great distance away that the least deflection in its course would send it by our globe, but there is no telling it may be the messenger to wind up earthly affairs.
