The Mifflintown Post Office.

Even since the inauguration of President Cleveland the democracy have been on the slert.

The watchword is "who goes there. T is is particularly true of the post office question, and every despatch sent out from Washington has been believe in republican principles, but The law merely prescribes that the and will ever be kept green in the President elect shall be sworn in at hearts of those who were afflicted subject of appointment.

With such facts thrusting them selves prominently forward at every turn, it was not to be wondered that all post office candidates in town were surprised over two despatches, sent from Washington on the subject of appointments to office.

The Cleveland kickers and the Cleveland backers were all alike, excited.

The one despatch announced that, that Post Master General Bissell will not commission local business men actual duties are performed by irre clerks and substitutes.

The other despatch announcd that editors are not to be appointed because the President is sensitive on the belief that the people consider that when a newspaper man takes office it is a sort of a bribe for his support, and that destroys in a measure his influence as a free party ed-
