The Coxy Army at Washington, are petitioning Congress to provide them with food. They say the strike cut off supplies from the west intended for them. If the Coxy people can't maintain themselves they should be sent home as paupers are sent home under the law, and if their immediate friends at home cannot keep them, it will fall to the lot of the overseers of the poor to provide for them. It will not do to shoot them.

The tuberculous that manifested itself in the herd of cattle of William Guss of Milford township, was in pedigree cattle that were brought from Kentucky to Ohio, from Ohio to Mifflin county, and from Mifflin county, by Michael Stecher to Juniata county, where some of the stock was sold to his brother-in-law Wm. Guss. How many generations removed from Kentucky the Guss cattle are has not been stated.

Mountain water is a good thing, but people should not be led by false representations. Now the people of Duncannon are urged to engage in the enterprise of introducing mountain water which if they can afford they will not regret, but the men who are urging the enterprise are telling them if they introduce the water the rates of their insurance will be reduced by the insurance companies. That same talk was indulged in every day previous to the introduction of water into Mifflintown. Since we have the water, insurance rates are higher than before the water was brought to town.

The Mifflin people came to Port Royal and had for main line connection and late the pleasure of a three mile walk early on Sunday morning.

It is a blessing to have good eyesight, and it is a blessing that is for if we had the sight that a good microscope enlarges we all of us would become disgusted with the living things that we drink and eat—little perfect organizations that are not visible to the eyesight, unassisted by glasses. A correspondent of the Bloomfield Democrat speaks of the invisible things that were revealed through a glass in a fish dam in Perry county as follows: A few weeks ago the surface of the water in Jacob Dum's fish-dam assumed a greenish hue, which gradually changed into a dark red and then into a dull yellow color, and recently disappeared altogether. When examined by a microscope it was found that this peculiar coloring matter consisted of tiny globular eggs. These eggs did not produce animal life as those of some reptiles do, but they rapidly evolved into animals, resembling snakes, lizards, turtles and into innumerable different other animated forms. Some of them were transparent and the food that they had eaten could be seen in their bodies as distinctly as if it had been placed in a glass bottle. They seemed exceedingly voracious, gulping down all the small forms of animal life that came in their way. Some of them could at will either lengthen or shorten themselves. They were of some half dozen different colors and moved about very rapidly. Whether these animalcule assumed wings and flew away, or perished and decayed, I am not able to state. At all events they were a curiosity to be held.
